BLESSED WITH A NEW BISHOP

‘Walk with me,’ Bishop Fernandes asks people of diocese after ordination, installation

By Tim Puet
For The Catholic Times

Bishop Earl Fernandes expressed delight during his ordination ceremony at the opportunity to be the Diocese of Columbus’ spiritual leader and asked the people of the diocese to join him on a journey he hopes will continue into the mid-21st century.

“I am so happy to be your shepherd and want to work for you. I promise that I will be close to you,” he said in about 10 minutes of remarks near the end of his installation as the 13th bishop of the diocese on Tuesday, May 31 at Westerville St. Paul Church.

“The pope wants a synodal church—a church that walks together,” he said. “I want you, the people of God, to walk with me on a journey that leads to paradise.” He noted that the feast of Pentecost is this coming Sunday, June 5 and invited the diocese’s 278,000 Catholics to join him in “a new Pentecost to set the world on fire.”

“I hope to be here for the next 25 years,” he said, humorously adding, “Of course, that means you’ll have to be listening to me for the next 25 years.”

“I am asking you to make little sacrifices with great hearts for priestly vocations,” he said at the conclusion of his remarks, noting that because the diocese is ordaining no priests this year, there will be more bishops than priests ordained for the diocese in 2022.

“I also ask the young men present to consider sacrificing and making a gift of yourselves out of love for the people of the diocese” by becoming priests, said Bishop Fernandes, who at 49 is the nation’s youngest bishop.

The new bishop comes to Columbus from Cincinnati, where he was pastor of St. Ignatius of Loyola Church. He thanked Cincinnati Archbishop Dennis Schnurr, who was one of three consecrating bishops at the ceremony, for his “fatherly care and leadership as my bishop. He was influential in bringing about the rebirth and flourishing of a vocations culture in Cincinnati, and I hope to reproduce that here,” Bishop Fernandes said.

Referring to his immediate predecessors, Bishop Robert Brennan of the Diocese of Brooklyn, New York, another of the consecrating bishops, he said, “I have big shoes to fill. Bishop Brennan was here only briefly but lifted the morale of the people of this diocese.”

He remarked that he and Bishop Earl Boyea of Lansing, Michigan, a former Pontifical College Josephinum president who also was present, are the only two bishops in the world named Earl. He then noted that the Lansing diocese includes Ann Arbor, the home of the University of Michigan, and in a reference to the Ohio State University-Michigan football rivalry, said, “I am sure that he and I will have a friendly wager, and that he will lose.”

About 1,500 people, including more than 30 bishops and more than 260 priests from many dioceses, filled the church for the three-hour ceremony. St. Paul Church was chosen as the site instead of Columbus’ St. Joseph Cathedral because it is the largest church in the diocese, allowing more people to attend in person. The installation also was livestreamed on the diocesan website and televised live nationwide on EWTN and Catholic Television.

Unlike most of his predecessors, Bishop Fernandes did not deliver the homily at his installation because he was not yet a bishop at that point in the ceremony. His ordination to the Order of Bishops occurred shortly after the homily by Archbishop Gregory Hartmayer, OFM Conv, of the Archdiocese of Atlanta.

This was the first time since the ordination of Bishop John Watterson, the diocese’s second bishop, in Columbus St. Joseph Cathedral in 1880 that a bishop of Columbus had not already been ordained a bishop elsewhere.

Archbishop Schnurr was the principal consecrating bishop. Bishop Brennan and Archbishop Christophe Pierre, the Vatican’s apostolic nuncio to the United States, served as co-consecrators.

Archbishop Pierre on April 2 had announced Pope Francis’ appointment of then-Father Fernandes to succeed Bishop Brennan, who was installed as bishop of Brooklyn on Nov. 30, 2021.

Bishop Brennan had been installed as Columbus’ 12th bishop on March 29, 2019 after serving as auxiliary bishop of the Diocese of Rockville Centre, New York for nearly seven years.

Msgr. Stephen Moloney, vicar general of the diocese, was Columbus diocesan administrator in the period between Bishop Brennan’s departure and Bishop Fernandes’ installation.

The ordination took place on the Feast of the Visitation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, honoring Mary’s visit to her cousin Elizabeth upon learning that Elizabeth was pregnant with the child who became John the Baptist. In the motto he chose—Veni Per Mariam, Latin for “Come Through Mary”—Bishop Fernandes expressed his reliance on the Blessed Mother. Archbishop Hartmayer’s homily focused on the Scripture readings for the day’s feast and had the theme “Mary journeys, Mary encounters, and Mary rejoices,” which the archbishop said was inspired by a homily Pope Francis preached in Romania in 2019.

“The journey,” he said. “She makes a difficult and dangerous journey from Nazareth to the house of Zechariah and Elizabeth. It was a journey that required courage and patience. The experience of a journey is one that resonates within the heart of our bishop-elect, Father Earl.”

He then summarized key points in the life of Bishop Fernandes, the first bishop of Indian origin for a Roman Catholic diocese in the United States. The bishop was born in Toledo; discerned while in medical school that he was being called to the priesthood; studied moral theology in Rome; served at the Apostolic Nunciature in Washington; was a teacher and academic dean at Mount St. Mary’s Seminary of the West in Cincinnati; and was pastor of two churches in the Cincinnati archdiocese prior to his appointment as a bishop.

The Atlanta archbishop quoted Archbishop Schnurr’s statement when the appointment was announced: “Through all his assignments, Father Fernandes has been an ever-joyful witness to the goodness, beauty and truth of the Catholic faith.”

“You do not give in to anger or despair,” he said. “Rather, you let these experiences of adversity shape your empathy and compassion. You took to heart the wise counsel of St. Teresa of Calcutta: ‘True love is love that causes us pain that hurts and yet brings us joy.’

mayer said, “She is filled with joy because she entrusts herself to the Lord in all things. Mary reminds us that God can always work wonders if we open our hearts to Him and to our brothers and sisters.”

He quoted this description of a bishop’s work by Pope Francis: “A bishop will sometimes go before his people, pointing the way and keeping their hopes vibrant. At other times, he will simply be in their midst with his unassuming and merciful presence. At yet other times, he will have to walk after them, helping those who lag behind and, above all, allowing the flock to strike out on new paths.”

“This is the road that lies ahead of you, my dear brother Earl,” Archbishop Hartmayer said.

The ceremony began with a procession of civic and religious leaders, including Gov. Mike DeWine and his wife, Fran, followed by the deacons and priests of the diocese and other bishops in attendance, including Bishops Frederick Campbell and James Griffin, Bishop Brennan’s predecessors as bishop of Columbus. Both live in the diocese in retirement.

Bishop Fernandes was accompanied by two priests he chose to assist him. They are Msgr. Frank Lane of the Diocese of Columbus, who is retired, lives in Cincinnati and served with him on the Mount St. Mary’s Seminary faculty, and Father Richard Marchese, who worked with the bishop at the papal nuncio’s office, where he was stationed from 2016-2019.

The first Scripture reading for the Mass, in Spanish, was proclaimed by Miguel Buckenmayer, with the second reading by Sister Maria Juan Anderson, RSM. Both readers are friends of the Fernandes family. Bishop Fernandes’ brother, Deacon Trevor Fernandes of the Ukrainian Catholic Eparchy of Parma, was the Gospel reader.

Following the Gospel reading, the congregation sang Come Holy Ghost, and Father Fernandes was presented to Archbishop Schnurr, who was the principal consecrator because he is the metropolitan archbishop for the ecclesiastical province of Cincinnati, which includes the Diocese of Columbus and all five of Ohio’s other Roman Catholic dioceses.

Archbishop Pierre said in brief remarks that a bishop’s role is to be, like the Apostles, “a witness to the Resurrection,” then read the letter from Pope Francis appointing the new bishop. The letter was presented to the diocesan chancellor, Deacon Thomas Berg Jr., and the Diocesan College of Consultants, a group of priests who serve as advisers to the bishop.

As Bishop Brennan had done at his installation, Bishop Fernandes then walked up and down the aisles of the church and held the letter aloft for all to see.

At Vespers service, clergy, faithful pray for blessings

On the eve of the ordination and installation of Earl Fernandes as the 13th bishop of the Diocese of Columbus, a Solemn Vespers service was held on Monday evening, May 30 at Columbus St. Andrew Church.

Bishop Robert Brennan, the predecessor of Bishop-elect Fernandes in Columbus, returned to Columbus from the Diocese of Brooklyn to lead the prayer service. Bishop Brennan was the bishop of Columbus for 2 ½ years before the native New Yorker was appointed to be the spiritual shepherd in Brooklyn.

Archbishop Christophe Pierre, the apostolic nuncio who serves as the Vatican’s representative to the United States, was scheduled to preside but missed the ceremony because of travel issues.

Bishops and spiritual leaders from other dioceses and eparchies participated in the ceremony. Among them were retired Columbus Bishops James Griffin and Frederick Campbell.

Also in attendance were numerous priests and religious sisters who serve in the 23-county diocese. They joined the invitation-only congregation, which included the four brothers and families of the bishop-elect, that filled the sanctuary.

Vespers consisted of anthems, antiphons and canticles sung by the Columbus St. Joseph Cathedral choir, directed by Dr. Richard Fitzgerald and accompanied by Amanda Mole, the cathedral’s principal organist.

A scripture reading from St. Paul to the Romans preceded the homily by Bishop Daniel Thomas of Toledo, the bishop-elect’s home diocese.

Bishop Thomas referenced the reading while drawing a parallel to fatherhood and the importance of fathers teaching and providing spiritual and physical strength.

“The new bishop comes to stand in the person of the father, to become a father of this family of faith – a daunting task,” Bishop Thomas said. “Dear friends, this evening, I ask that you pray for him so that he may give himself as a child of a father, a holy and ardent bishop who pours himself out for you, who loves you, nurtures you and desires to be united with you in heaven.

“Every good father loves his children unconditionally, and so will your bishop strive to love you. Every father loves first by example to protect his family from harm and evil. And so will your new bishop love you.

“Whatever our vocation, no matter what age, the discipleship we live, if we understand that we’re loved by the Father, we will be at odds with a world which would have the Church change to fit the world – a world that may reject us because we choose to live Jesus.”

After the homily, Bishop-elect Fernandes recited and signed an Oath of Fidelity at the altar. Bishop Brennan attested to and signed the document.

A blessing of the Pontifical Insignia and items that a bishop uses were brought in front of the altar for sprinkling with holy water by Bishop Brennan.

The bishop-elect wore red choir vestments and a pectoral cross. At the ordination and installation on Tuesday, May 31 at Westerville St. Paul Church, he received the bishop’s miter, crosier and ring.

Bishop Thomas referred to those items in his homily.

“St. Paul reminds us that it is the task of this new bishop to live, preach and teach in such a way that everyone realizes the inheritance that awaits us,” he said. “In a few moments, the symbols of a new bishop’s office, the Pontifical Insignia, the ring, miter and crosier will be blessed. Bishop-elect Earl Fernandes is called to be the father of the faithful, and as a father, also a child of the Father, united to the Son and trusting in the Spirit as an heir of heaven.”

Bishop Thomas mentioned the bishop’s ring that will be worn on the new bishop’s right ring finger as a symbol of his nuptial bond with the Church of Columbus and his “fidelity as the bride of Christ.” The origins of a bishop’s ring, he said, can be traced to 610 when Pope Boniface IV declared one be worn.

He also explained the significance of the crosier and the miter and concluded by saying:

“We pray this evening for the new bishop and for his flock in the Diocese of Columbus, together that they may see His face and unfailing love, and do your part totally, as He has done His.”

response to questions by Archbishop Schnurr, promised to guard the Catholic faith and discharge the duties of his office. As he did when he was ordained a priest, he then lay face-down as the Litany of the Saints was sung by all in attendance.

Following the litany, he kneeled before Archbishop Schnurr, who laid hands on his head, with the other bishops present each doing the same.

The archbishop concluded the act of ordination with a prayer as two deacons held an open Book of the Gospels above the new bishop’s head. He then anointed Bishop Fernandes’ head with holy oil and presented him with the Book of the Gospels and the insignia of his office – a ring, a miter, a crosier and a pectoral cross. The crosier belonged to Bishop Sylvester Rosecrans, the first bishop of Columbus, and dates back to 1868, when the Diocese of Columbus was established.

Bishop Fernandes then was escorted by Archbishops Schnurr and Pierre to the cathedra, the bishop’s chair. Once seated on the cathedra, he officially became bishop of Columbus. Rising from the chair, he received a fraternal kiss of peace from all the bishops present. The Mass then continued in its usual form. Following the prayer after communion and before his closing remarks and the final blessing, Bishop Fernandes walked up and down the aisles of the church bestowing his first blessings on the congregation.

Besides those already listed, other bishops present included the archbishops of Hartford, Connecticut and Detroit and bishops from all the dioceses of Ohio and the dioceses of Grand Rapids, Michigan; Wheeling-Charleston, West Virginia; Crookston, Minnesota; St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; Covington, Kentucky; Des Moines, Iowa; Jefferson City, Missouri; Joliet, Illinois; and Rockville Centre.

Representing Eastern Catholic rites were the archbishops of the Byzantine Catholic Archeparchy of Pittsburgh and the bishops of the Byzantine Catholic Eparchy of Parma; the Romanian Catholic Eparchy of Canton; the Byzantine Catholic Eparchy of Passaic; New Jersey; the Syro-Malabar Catholic Eparchy of the United States and Canada; the Maronite Eparchy of Our Lady of Lebanon; and the Ukrainian Catholic Eparchy of Parma.

Other participants in the liturgy were: Deacons Joe Ciacciura and Peter Claver Kasasa Kiviri and masters of ceremonies Andrew Burson, David Johnstone, Kevin Girardi, Tyler Carter and Deacons Dan Hann and Reed Hauser.

Members of Bishop Fernandes’ family were gift bearers, and the seminarians of the Diocese of Columbus were servers. The St. Joseph Cathedral choir, directed by Dr. Richard Fitzgerald, with organist Amanda Mole and the cathedral’s brass ensemble, provided music.

When the members of the Fernandes family learned that their brother was going to be named the new bishop of Columbus, they couldn’t have been more thrilled for him.

But after the initial shock and excitement died down, one of his nieces asked an important question: “Does this mean we can’t go to the ordination?”

“My kids are unbelievably close to my brother,” said Eustace Fernandes, 48, the youngest of the five Fernandes brothers and the father of five children. “My 14-year-old daughter, Felicity, she had a big smile on her face when she heard, and then she kind of teared up a little bit. She’s incredibly proud.

“He’s still part of our family, and he’s always going to be, but this is where God is calling him now, a new phase in his life, his vocation, this ministry in Columbus. And we just have to pray for him and support him.”

On Friday, April 1, the night before the appointment was made public, then-Father Earl Fernandes had first shared the good news with his immediate family, which includes the four brothers, their wives and 15 nieces and nephews.

The next morning, he left brother Ashley Fernandes’ home in Dublin to drive to the diocesan offices in downtown Columbus for a news conference after the Holy See made the announcement public a few hours earlier.

“My youngest son is his godson, and he pulled us into a room and he told us,” Ashley said. “And, oh, my gosh, I went crazy. I was like screaming for like five minutes straight. It was like Ohio State won the national championship, the Pittsburgh Steelers had won the Super Bowl. It was all of that. I was so excited.”

Ashley, 50, a Columbus pediatrician, medical ethicist and professor at Ohio State University, had an inkling earlier that week when his brother said he was visiting Toledo to see his friend Bishop Daniel Thomas and also their beloved mother, Thelma, who is suffering from dementia and other ailments that prevented her from attending the ordination and installation of the second-youngest of her five sons on Tuesday, May 31 at Westerville St. Paul Church.

“So I started thinking, Oh, my gosh, you know what? He’s been made a bishop,” Ashley said. “Why would he go from Cincinnati to Toledo to talk to my mom and then Bishop Thomas. Maybe he’s getting advice on how to be a bishop.

“My brothers are like, ‘You’re crazy. My oldest brother, Karl, is a very practical person and he’s like, ‘He’s too young. He’s definitely qualified, but we can’t get that lucky.’”

Ashley’s suspicions were correct. And, at age 49, Earl Fernandes became the youngest Roman Catholic bishop to lead a U.S. diocese.

“I’m not surprised,” said Deacon Trevor Fernandes, 53, who serves at St. Michael Ukrainian Greek Catholic Church in Rossford, Ohio, outside of Toledo and has been a Lucas County Probate Court magistrate for 24 years. The second-oldest of the five brothers, he proclaimed the Gospel at Tuesday’s ordination and installation Mass.

“When someone is at the top of their class in high school, in college, in medical school – and has everything that the world, the flesh and the devil tell you is the best thing for you and you won’t be happy with anything else – he has chosen the narrow way,” Trevor said. “He chose the cross.

“And the reason I think he’ll be a very good bishop is because he never wanted to be one. All he ever wanted when he felt called to Holy Orders was to be a priest of a parish, have a youth group that was active, have a school and be able to interact with families like we did when we were growing up, to be able to laugh and cry with them and to hold their hands.”

All of the brothers have achieved great success in their careers in medicine and law, with three of them becoming doctors and one a magistrate. And their children have shown similar academic prowess, including one niece who is a third-year medical student at Ohio State.

But they agree that the new bishop was the most academically gifted.

“He’s an incredibly bright, incredibly talented person,” said Eustace, a pulmonologist and critical care physician in Fort Wayne, Indiana, who graduated from medical school at Ohio State.

“And that can sometimes present challenges because he could say, ‘I could be good at this. I could be good at that.’

“I’m sure he could have been an excellent husband, an excellent physician. Ashley, Earl and myself were all in medical school at the same time, and Earl would lay on a couch half asleep, flipping through his notebooks, watching ESPN, and do great on exams, while I was always restless in those things. And when he really pursued the priesthood, there was a sense that he was invigorated. And it was really like he was going out in the deep with the Lord, and he had a peace about him and an engagement about him that was different.”

The brothers all have stories to tell about their now-bishop brother while they were growing up on the east side of Toledo in a modest home.

Ashley shared a story about a boxing match while mom and dad were away from the house between himself and Earl when they were ages 5 and 4, with one wearing mittens and the other with bare knuckles. Earl took a couple of shots to the face and still kept smiling before the pain hit him. Then the boys panicked about how to explain the situation to mom and dad when they returned.

Eustace joked that his side of the bedroom the brothers shared in their parents’ home was always messy while Earl’s was “pristine.”

Ashley said he saw certain qualities in Earl at a young age that gave him an inkling that his brother might someday be called to the priesthood. Like most kids, Earl participated in sports and was involved in academic-type extracurricular activities.

“He was not someone who would go around shouting the rosary. It was not like outward signs,” Ashley said. “But it was kind of more the way he treated other people. He wasn’t an aggressive person or he didn’t make fun of people like a lot of boys do.

“There was always something about him that made people think, well, maybe. … He was much more thoughtful about his faith, and he handled people’s questions in a very kind, diplomatic way.

“When people would question the faith or criticize the Church, he would talk to them in a different way than my brothers and I would have done. We might have been trying to win an argument, and he was not pushing back but drawing them in.”

Almost everyone who has come in contact with Bishop Fernandes remarks about the smile he constantly wears, even during Mass.

“He’s the face of the consecration, or maybe after the consecration, and all of a sudden he’ll start smiling,” Ashley said.

“And my wife will always comment on how joyful he seems.”

Trevor says there’s a story behind his brother’s smile during the consecration that goes back to India, where the two oldest boys were born before their parents moved to America.

Their devout Catholic father, Sydney, a longtime physician who passed away in 2019 at age 82, had assisted at Traditional Latin Mass as the server at St. John the Evangelist Church in Bombay during the 1960s for an elderly Portuguese priest. After the priest said the words of consecration, his face would flash a “radiant smile, with sometimes tears streaming down his face,” Trevor related. “And it made a huge impression on my dad.

“So when you see Earl celebrate Mass or the sacraments, sometimes even when it seems like it’s inappropriate to smile, Earl is lit with that fire, the joy of Christ, the joy of vocation. If other people burn like a candle, he is lit like an alabaster jar.”

“He’s a lot like my dad. He’s cool under pressure. But it’s the glow that warms the heart.”

characteristics, his brothers agree, is love for families and children, which stems from their loving and devoted Catholic parents who emigrated from India in 1970 with little money and no family in the United States.

“It is a witness to my parents and how they allowed God to dwell in our family and how they allowed God’s glory to shine through them in order to raise us and try to help us raise our children,” Eustace said. “That to me, that’s the final word on it.”

One of Eustace’s five children, 19-year-old Ignatius, came from Armenia 12 years ago through an adoption facilitated by his priest brother, who had been there to preach a Holy Week retreat for the Missionaries of Charity sisters.

Ignatius, as he’s called now, was difficult to place because he was born with spina bifida. But Eustace and his wife, Anne, a physical therapist turned stay-at-home homeschooling mother, felt as though God was using them to adopt a child with special needs.

“My brother Earl has always been part of our family,” said Eustace, whose children range in age from 9 to 20. “Our youngest son (Leo) was very ill at birth and was in the ICU for 10 days, and he completed the Rite of Baptism for him. ‘And the other kids, if they need an opinion, if they’re struggling with something, you know, big or small, he’s always taking the time to interact with them, to be an uncle, and just be very gentle with them in a way that a parent isn’t always equipped to be. He’s been incredibly busy, but we’ve never felt like he was inaccessible to our family.”

In addition to celebrating the sacraments with family members, Bishop Fernandes had the special privilege of being with his father at his death and at his funeral Mass and with his brother, Trevor, when he was ordained a deacon.

“Every single experience he’s had is going to make him a better bishop,” Ashley said, “and has prepared him for his moment. I’m super excited for him.”

Ashley tried to put into perspective for his children the significance of their uncle becoming a bishop.

“If you think about it, and I was telling my kids, ‘Guys, you can win the Nobel Prize, but unless you become a priest and be like your uncle, you can never be a successor to the Apostles.’”

The prayers of the students, faculty and staff of Bishop Watterson High School are with you.
CINCINNATI — Megan Meers summed up the feelings of the parishioners that Bishop Earl Fernandes left behind at St. Ignatius of Loyola Church in Cincinnati with a letter she wrote to the faithful of the Diocese of Columbus after learning their beloved pastor was named a bishop.

While reading to The Catholic Times what she had written, she paused several times, her voice choked with emotion. The letter went like this:

“Congratulations on the appointment of Bishop-elect Earl Fernandes. You’ve just hit the jackpot. In him, you will find him a faithful and fearless father, a strong leader and a devoted friend. He’s a man of God’s word, but more importantly he’s a man of God’s heart. He’s a man with unmatched intelligence and an unstoppable work ethic.

“Many will say he’s too busy, but he will always make time for what is truly important. Some have characterized him as a pinball, quickly bouncing from one task to another, accomplishing efficiently what would take a normal man twice as long to complete, and I can see the resemblance in this metaphor. But it has its faults, namely, it suggests that his movement is erratic or haphazard.

“What comes to mind at least for me is the work of a simple honeybee. The honeybee knows its purpose, its task and sets about each day to diligently complete it. ... In other words, the bishop-elect will produce great fruit for God and the church. Yet the faithful will also realize their full potential if they openly receive his instruction and love and live.

“To know him is to love him. And to love him is to find greater love for God, Jesus Christ in the Catholic Church. His holiness will challenge you. This presence calls you to rise to greater heights of excellence. In him you will see the face of Christ.

“I’ve witnessed him kneeling with the elderly to hear their confessions. I’ve seen him drop everything to accompany the sick and the dying. I admire his constancy and humbling himself before the altar of our Lord in prayer. He will take good care of those entrusted to him. Please take good care of him,” she concluded in her letter.

Meers, an assistant music director and teacher and director of innovation and design at the parish school and also a parent, marveled at the bishop’s ability to connect with people and to connect them with one another.

“He has an amazing ability to befriend others and then to see the best in those people and help them work together,” she said. “A lot of people struggle with the hierarchy of the church because they feel very removed from our experiences just in the world. But he’s not one of those. He takes the time to listen, and to talk to you and to truly get to know you.”

She has witnessed him display those same people skills when interacting with the children in school.

“He’s a father to them, and he takes delight in them,” she said. “I direct the children’s choir here, and often he will just stop by our rehearsals and just enjoy the children as they are — joke with them and also teach them and encourage them and just love them.”

Like many in the parish, Meers and her family are extremely sad to see their pastor leave after less than three years there. Bishop Fernandes was assigned by the Archdiocese of Cincinnati to St. Ignatius in 2019.

“It really has been like a grieving process,” she said. “I consider him a friend. I have a daughter in first grade, and she said to me. ‘Oh, mom, Father Earl remembers everybody. What makes you think he’s going to forget us.’ You know, it’s very, very true.

“A lot of people have commented over his time here that we’ve all known he’s called to greater things than being a pastor here. Even though this is a great job, too, he’s made for more, and this makes sense.”

Bishop Fernandes exhibited the ability to his parishioners not only to engage with people but also be involved in the numerous ministries at the large parish on Cincinnati’s west side.

“He did such a good job of bringing all the ministries together that support the family and organized us a little bit, like where do we overlap and how can we better help each other be more efficient,” said Michelle Wanstrath, a parishioner, and outreach at St. Ignatius.

Wanstrath echoed other parishioners’ past observations that their pastor wouldn’t be with them long.

“We’re so, so happy for him, but we’re also sad to lose him at the same time,” she said. “He’s so active and engaged. He really is kind of like an Energizer Bunny. I don’t know when he sleeps. He would be at ministry events, all of these meetings with the ministry leaders, and just getting out there in the parish on a personal level not related to the ministries.

“He did home blessings, and so he would come to anybody’s home. He was one of the few priests in our area during COVID who continued going out into the hospitals, putting himself at risk, really getting out there and being with the people wherever he was needed to say Mass in nursing homes or going to hospitals. He was just go, go, go through the pandemic and beyond.

The sick man was not at a hospital the parish frequents for sick calls, but “Father had actually come from a Holy Hour for the Ukraine, and he emailed me back within minutes,” Rewwer said. “This was somebody who had been away from the Church for so long, was very, very sick, and he left everything and went over there. That was always so important to him, to make sure that the sick and the dying receive the sacraments, anointing of the sick, reconciliation.

“That was amazing that he did that with as busy as he is, and it was not a parishioner, … but he made himself available.”

Macke, another staff member the future bishop hired after he arrived at St.
Ignatius, appreciated the pastoral vision after working closely with him on parish faith formation programs and outreach.

“Evangelization happens through a lot of different avenues, and, like Father has said to me, I think it happens one person at a time,” Macke said, “which is really relatable. It’s about discipleship, because programs will not make disciples.
Jesus works through each one of us.”

mally come to church.

The parish planned an evangelization workshop training for the festival booth volunteers to answer faith-related questions, “not pressuring people, but just opening up that door to have a faith conversation, having materials but not overwhelming people who may not be religious or churched, and also share their own faith stories,” Macke said.

“The other thing about Father Fernandes is, he’s not a micromanager, which I appreciate,” Macke said. “Sometimes I’m waiting for him to tell us what to do here, and he throws the question back into our lap a lot as a staff.”

School principal Kevin Vance wittnessed a similar level of engagement with a staff of 130 and the more than 1,110 students in pre-K through eighth grade.

“He came in during a difficult year (COVID-19 outbreak), and I think one of the best things he did just overall was bring some calmness and stability,” Vance said. “He took time to get to know all of us. I think the best thing he did was just to listen at first and see where we and where do you want to go.

“He’s always been super supportive of education. If you talk to him for five or 10 minutes, you’ll hear the story about how his dad went to their parish priest (in Toledo) and begged that he and his brothers could go to school there. He’s been in Catholic education for quite a few years, either as a high school teacher, as a seminary teacher, and now here at the largest Catholic elementary school in the state of Ohio.”

Students go to Mass once a week, of-	en celebrated by the future bishop, and he frequented the classrooms to engage the students. And he often could be found standing outside in the before- or after-school drop-off or pickup lines to chat with families.

“He has a certain presence with the children that they really look up to him or warm up to him,” Vance said. “He makes people feel welcome. So I think people approach him naturally and just talk. He’s concerned about what they’re doing and where they’ve been and how they’re doing and what they’ve learned.
He takes that personal time or that time to get to know them.

“The kids aren’t threatened or afraid of him or anything like that. They really kind of embrace him because he’s warm and personable, and he shares some of his life stories. He’s come into the classroom fairly often.”

13th Bishop of the Diocese of Columbus
New priest made lasting impression in first assignment

SIDNEY, Ohio – When Father Earl Fernandes showed up at Holy Angels Church in the summer of 2002 for his first assignment after ordination, the parish’s pastor told the women working in the office that it was a blessing to have received the cream of the crop from the class of new priests. They still remember that day vividly.

“He was at the door, and he said hello, and he went one way and I went one way, and we went around in a circle and then just stood there and laughed,” recalled Connie Fahnke, who was the parish office manager. “We asked him if we could help him carry anything, and he said he could get it, but we ended up helping him anyway.”

Fast forward 20 years, and “when we found out that this was happening,” that Father Fernandes had been named the new bishop of the Diocese of Columbus on April 2, “I called one of my good friends who is very good friends with Father Earl, and I said, ‘Wait until you hear,’ and so I told her what was being announced,” said Jill Heitmeyer, the parish’s current business manager.

“And she goes, ‘We knew that 20 years ago. I still think he’s going to be pope someday.’”

To the good people of Sidney, it became obvious early on in Father Fernandes’ two years there that he was gifted with special qualities – down to earth, relatable, intelligent, devoted, faithful, loyal, memory like a steel trap, family oriented.

And there was that engaging smile mentioned by nearly everyone who has come in contact with him. He flashed his toothy grin then and hasn’t stopped smiling throughout his priesthood.

“I think that’s why so many people relate to him,” Fahnke said. “He was always smiling from the altar during Mass. And he would walk out of Mass with this beautiful smile and joy – just a wonderful person and a good friend.”

Jill Heitmeyer, the parish’s pastor at Holy Angels from 1999 to 2001, would come up with ideas that would be presented to him. “He really considers it his first parish family here,” he said about studying in Rome when he served as a student there.

Heitmeyer said. “I remember the Lehman kids would kind of like be pushing him up. Very personable and sharp as a tack,” Heitmeyer said. “I remember the Lehman kids would kind of like be pushing him, and with a medical background (as a former medical student), they couldn’t stump him. They would ask him questions, and he would explain things to them, probably more than what they wanted to know. So disciplined in his faith, very devout, and he was that way with medical facts, too.”

He displayed a gift for teaching at Lehman, despite never teaching at that level, that earned the admiration of students and faculty, and he won a teacher of the year award.

“For me, I guess his legacy is just his kindness and his welcoming,” math teacher Melissa Safreed said. “What I remember most specifically were the Kairos retreats. He was so relatable in the classroom but especially on retreat. I think especially the young men just admired him so much for being so real.

“Something else that stands out is that he doesn’t forget anybody. He does not forget a face with a name and can remember occasions. He came back to celebrate Mass with us last year post-COVID, and while we were still social distancing, he remembered names of faculty and specific occasions from when he was here and just so real. What a role model, always smiling. I remember him smiling so much.”

“Even with his intelligence, he’s always been approachable,” math teacher Pam Wendel said. “Whoever he was talking to, whether it was another faculty member or talking with students, he gave you a sense of being valued, that you were first on his mind when he was talking with you and wasn’t somewhere else.”

A priest assigned to area parishes has served as chaplain and taught religion classes at Lehman. Some have had teaching backgrounds, and others have no experience. Father Fernandes was never a high school teacher before arriving in Sidney, but he clearly showed his acumen in academics, drawing upon his background as a medical student.

“Sometimes there are chaplains who are chaplains who also teach,” theology teacher Joe Schmiesing said, “but I think Father Earl was a teacher in every sense of the word. Even though he was young and inexperienced when he first came here, he was so respected by the kids.”

Schmiesing recalled a story that Father Fernandes shared while he was teaching at Lehman.

“He had somebody who tried to turn in a report, saying, ‘Well, I just don’t believe what the Church believes. So I don’t have to do this report,’” Schmiesing said. “And he said, ‘Well, I understand your opinion. However, this is an academic assignment.’

“He wrote him back like a lengthy answer on why he had to do that report. And he said the kid gave him back a good report. He was an intelligent kid who just was trying to play him as the young priest. Well, he was serious.”

“He taught from the heart, and he has a passion for what he lives and what he role-models and what he taught in the classroom,” Safreed said.

“And I know that his parents always highly valued education,” Schmiesing said. “He had been taught that this was really, really important, and I think he brought that into the classroom. He believed that the classroom was really, really important for the students no matter who they were, where they were coming from, what their faith was.

“He wasn’t an academic, even though he really is.”

In the years since he left Sidney, some of his former students have moved to the Columbus area. He has celebrated some of their weddings while he was a priest in Cincinnati, fulfilling a promise he made to Lehman students he had in class that he would officiate at their weddings if asked.

“He’s done quite a few,” said Sister Ginny Scherer, a retired faculty member at Lehman who continues to help out at the school.

One takeaway for Sister Ginny from the future bishop’s time there was the exuberance he exhibited in serving the Lord.

“I’d emphasize the way he said Mass,” she said. “He was happy instead of being really just solemn. Mass was important to him, and it was a joyful experience when you went to Mass with him.”

“If I had to kind of sum it up,” Schmiesing said, “I’d say he was just a good priest. He is the picture of what a good priest should be.”

That priest is now the first former faculty member to become a bishop from Lehman, which was founded in 1970.

“We are honored and excited for Bishop-elect Fernandes,” Lehman principal Veronica Gayer said. “As a school, we know that he will lead with God in his heart and mind.”

Father Bensman believes his former assistant’s work at the nunciature and frequent requests for him to speak about moral ethics throughout the country paved the way for becoming a bishop at the relatively young age of 49.

“I was impressed by the fact that he was named bishop of a fairly large diocese without ever being an auxiliary bishop,” Father Bensman said.

Catholics in the Diocese of Columbus might not want to hear this, but there’s a strong sentiment in Sidney that their new bishop might not be here all that long after his predecessor, Bishop Robert Brennan, lasted just 2 ½ years here.

“He’s only 49 years old, and that’s pretty young to be able to accomplish what he’s accomplished,” Father Bensman said. “But he can handle it.”

“He’s going to be so good,” Fahnke said. “I don’t look for this to be the end for Father Earl. This is just another step.”

“Wherever you put him, if he’s a bishop, he’ll be a good man and a good priest,” Schmiesing said. “He’s not going to change his fundamental nature.”

Sister Ginny, who taught at Marion Catholic High School for 10 years and knows the Columbus diocese, summed up the sentiments of seemingly everyone in Sidney:

“I just think that they have a treasure coming.”
Congratulations Bishop Earl Fernandes!

Welcome to the Diocese of Columbus!

May the Sacred Heart of Jesus be your strength and guide.

Our Lady of Peace

is looking forward to welcoming you to the Diocese of Columbus and to Our Life-giving Parish & school.
The ordination of Bishop Earl Fernandes as spiritual shepherd of the Diocese of Columbus was of special interest to diocesan parishioners who have their ethnic roots in India, for he is the first Indian-American to become a Roman Catholic bishop in the United States.

“I’m extremely happy with the news, and I know members of the Indian

Catholic community throughout the diocese feel the same way,” said Maria

Arockiaraj Pushparaj, who periodically hosts visiting Indian priests from the Archdiocese of Indianapolis for Sunday

Masses.

from what I’ve learned of Bishop Fernandes, he is going to provide a powerful witness to the strength of the Church in this diocese, as well as being an example of the long tradition and the endurance of the Church in India, which goes back to St. Thomas the Apostle,” he said.

“Perhaps he will provide an example for one of my children or someone from our community to become a priest.”

here,” said Dr. Rama Mallampalli, chairman of the department of internal medicine at the Ohio State University

Wexner Medical Center. “From what

I’ve learned of him, he impresses me as a visionary and a holy man.

“He appears to be someone who will be able to explain in a powerful way the substantive challenges facing the Catholic Church because of the priest shortage and the changes which this will necessitate.”

“The new bishop has given an impression of being a dynamic person, and

I look forward to hearing more from him,” said Frank Xavier, a member of Westerville St. Paul Church for 16 years who is on its parish council. “India is such a diverse nation, with 28 states,

each of which has its own language or language variation, and Bishop Fernandes himself is an example of that.”

The bishop’s father has his family roots in the city of Mangaluru, familarily known as Mangalore, a port on the Arabian Sea in western India. His mother’s family is from Goa, which was a

Portuguese colony until 1961, when it became an Indian state.

His father and mother, Dr. Sydney and Thelma Fernandes, both were born and brought up in Mumbai (Bombay), which like Mangaluru and Goa is in western India. They came to the United States in 1970, two years before Bishop

Fernandes was born in Toledo.

The bishop’s appointment gave all of those places a moment of civic pride and a chance to claim him as “one of their own.”

“My family in India was overjoyed,” the bishop said. “The Indian news media picked it up. The story was immediately translated into (the regional languages of) Malayalam and Konkani, and the Goans and the Mangalorians were fighting over me, and so I was sur-

A website known as The Mangalori-

an provided particularly extensive coverage of the appointment, with about

6,000 words of copy that included a

3,500-word interview. “I even gave an interview to Nirmala Carvalho (an India-based Catholic writer), which is translated into Italian. So all those

Bishops Brennan, Fernandes share similar traits

By Doug Bean
Catholic Times Editor

In many ways, new Diocese of Columbus Bishop Earl Fernandes resembles his predecessor, Bishop Robert Brennan.

Both possess incredible energy and apostolic zeal for the faith. They’re personable and affable, and they talk fast and seem to be everywhere. They’ve accumulated valuable administrative experience in the Church, and they’ve also been pastors.

Both were raised by devout Catholic parents and are one of five siblings. Both are relatively young for members of the hierarchy. Bishop Brennan was 56 when he came to the Columbus diocese in 2019. At 49, Bishop Fernandes becomes the youngest Roman Catholic bishop to lead a U.S. diocese.

As shepherds of a diocese, bishops can find those qualities beneficial in carrying out their service to the people.

In other ways, the two churchmen are different.

Bishop Brennan, who was installed as the bishop of the Diocese of Brooklyn on Nov. 30, 2021 after serving 2 ½ years in the Columbus diocese, is a native New Yorker who spent all of his life in the city before coming to Ohio in 2019. Plain-talking Midwesterners here found his New York accent captivating and distinctive.

Bishop Fernandes, the son of emigrants from India, grew up in Toledo, a city of significant size but nothing comparable with metropolitan New York. He’s also a man of color and the first Indian-American priest to be elevated to the episcopate.

As a native Ohioan who has served as a priest in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, his familiarity with the state should serve him well, Bishop Brennan said.

“I’m thrilled that he’s from Ohio and knows Ohio,” Bishop Brennan said from Brooklyn in an interview before Bishop Fernandes’ ordination and installation. “He has an advantage that he knows Ohio. He knows the state.

“That was the biggest challenge for me coming to Ohio that it was my first time in the state. I had to get to know the area. He already knows the cities and the rural areas, and that will help a great deal.

Bishop Fernandes asked his predecessor to be one of his co-consecrators for the ordination and installation that took place Tuesday, May 31 at Westerville St. Paul Church. The others were Archbishop Christophe Pierre, the apostolic nuncio to the United States whom Bishop Fernandes worked under in the Apostolic Nunciature in Washington, D.C.; and Archbishop Dennis Schnurr of Cincinnati, where the new bishop worked for most of his 20 years as a priest in parishes and as a seminary professor and academic dean.

“I’m very humbled and honored that he reached out to me,” Bishop Brennan said. “He knows a lot of bishops through his work with the nuncio, and it’s a great honor for me.”

Bishop Fernandes spent three years, from 2016 to 2019, working in Washington under two apostolic nuncios, Archbishops Carlo Maria Vigano and Pierre, who are the Vatican’s diplomatic representatives to the United States. Bishop Fernandes also studied in Rome, starting in 2004, before he returned to the United States to teach at the seminary in Cincinnati.

Archbishop Pierre presented the scroll at the ordination and installation to Bishop Fernandes with the formal decree from the Vatican of his appointment to Columbus. The archbishop also serves as chancellor of the Pontifical College Josephinum.

Bishop Brennan first learned about then-Father Fernandes through interactions with one of his brothers, Dr. Ashley Fernandes, a Columbus physician who is a member of the Catholic Medical Association of Central Ohio and a moral ethicist. When Father Fernandes joined the Board of Trustees at the Pontifical College Josephinum (Bishop Brennan was vice chancellor as part of his duties as bishop of Columbus), the two became better acquainted.

From the time of the announcement that Bishop Brennan was appointed to Brooklyn on Sept. 29 until Bishop Fernandes was named as his replacement, the process took approximately six months. Bishop Brennan was not directly involved in the selection. The Church has a formal process for that.

“As far as my involvement in a successor, I gave my input as far as the needs of the diocese,” he said.

Since the announcement was made on April 2 that Bishop Fernandes was coming to Columbus, he has spoken frequently with Bishop Brennan.

“And I’m sure we’ll speak a few more times,” Bishop Brennan said.

Among the challenges facing Bishop Fernandes upon his arrival will be the Real Presence Real Future initiative that Bishop Brennan launched in 2021.

“He’ll need to take his time and assess things and make decisions based on his pastoral style and what he’s comfortable with,” Bishop Brennan said.

Diocesan priests enthusiastic about working with new bishop

Priests of the Diocese of Columbus who have met with Bishop Earl Fernandes have strongly favorable first impressions of him and are eager to help him become familiar with the people of the diocese.

“I’m super-excited after having met him briefly and seen some of his YouTube videos,” said Father David Sizemore, pastor of Newark St. Francis de Sales Church. “He seems to be just more, pastor of Newark St. Francis de Sales Church. “He seems to be just what the diocese needs at this time.

“His gifts of passion, energy, education, evangelization, administrative experience and pastoral leadership make for a wonderful combination,” Father Sizemore said. “His talk in late April with the priests of the diocese and the videos, particularly one he did on exorcism, all show a real sense of engagement and of connecting with people.”

While studying in Rome several years ago, the new bishop received training in exorcism, which is an official form of prayer the Catholic Church uses against the power of the devil. Although it has been sensationalized in books and on film, Bishop Fernandes has described it as “part of the proclamation of the kingdom of God, so it’s a sacramental in the Church. It’s part of a ministry of healing.”

Bishop Fernandes’ appointment to succeed Bishop Robert Brennan as shepherd of the Columbus diocese was announced on April 2. His first opportunity to meet most of the diocese’s priests came on April 27 at an informal luncheon the priests had scheduled earlier at Reynoldsburg St. Pius X Church so they could talk about the diocese’s Real Presence Real Future initiative.

“That impressed me a great deal,” Father Sizemore said. “He didn’t have to be here, because he still was serving as pastor of a large church in suburban Cincinnati, but he made the trip. As we were all talking in small groups, he went around the room, introduced himself, took part in the conversations and listened attentively. You could tell how important it was for him to meet each of us and engage us.”

Msgr. Joseph Hendricks, pastor of Dublin St. Brigid of Kildare Church, said he has known Bishop Fernandes for about five years through his friendship with Msgr. Frank Lane, a retired priest of the Columbus diocese. Msgr. Lane lives in Cincinnati, where he and the bishop were part of the faculty of Mount St. Mary’s Seminary of the West.

“Father Fernandes was always very cordial, very bright and very direct,” Msgr. Hendricks said. “And he really loves the priesthood. All these qualities shine through. He’s eager to be coming to this diocese and work with the people here, and, first of all, to be supportive and listen before he makes any major decisions.

“It’s a great asset that he’s worked with the Archdiocese of Cincinnati’s restructuring process. That will be a big help as he charts the course of this diocese through the Real Presence Real Future initiative.”

“Talking with Bishop Fernandes as he got ready for his ordination gave me a lot of comfort because I could tell he didn’t want to rush into things,” said Father Michael Hartge, moderator of the Curia for the diocese, who has played an active role in the initiative.

“He’s very thoughtful, very purposeful and wants to make sure he gets to know the diocese and its people before the next steps in Real Purpose Real Future are taken.”

“This means the initiative may take longer, for no one, especially Bishop Brennan, expected he’d be called to serve elsewhere when he began plans for it last year. But it also means Bishop Fernandes wants to get it right and already is thinking of the diocese’s long-term future.

“He’s had to do a bit of a juggling act between running his parish and getting ready to come here, but he managed it well,” Father Hartge said. “He was attentive to both roles right to the end. When he wasn’t here, he was calling me or others in the diocesan offices every day.”

“Bishop Fernandes impresses me as a man of holiness, with a strong prayer life and great humility,” said Father Dan Dury, pastor of Sunbury St. John Neumann Church. “He will bring great enthusiasm for everything he does to the diocese, as well as a great sense of being its spiritual father.

“Most of the priests of the diocese – about 80 out of a little more than 100 – were at that meeting at St. Pius and seeing our bishop-elect being in the midst of everyone and mainly just listening had a great impact.

“I’ve heard Bishop Fernandes say he likes chicken wings and beer, so I’m looking forward to taking him to the Thurman Café (in Columbus’) German Village one day and giving him a chance to try one of their giant hamburgers.”
It was not you who chose me, but I who chose you and appointed you to go forth and bear fruit that will remain.

Interviews reveal that everyone loves this bishop

Spending the past month and a half or so talking to people about Bishop Earl Fernandes provided valuable insights into the man who was chosen to lead the Diocese of Columbus as its 13th bishop. Common themes emerged.

He’s highly intelligent, he’s humble, he loves his vocation as a priest, he remembers your name, he’s loyal, he makes time to listen, he loves his family and supporting families, and he’s a man of great faith.

From Toledo, where he was raised and graduated to high school and college; to his first priestly assignment in Sidney, Ohio; to his parishioners in Cincinnati, his classmates in the seminary and priesthood, they couldn’t say enough good things about him.

Of course, what member of the Church or the clergy would say anything bad about a bishop, right? But it’s pretty easy to tell when people are being sincere or when they’re just being gratuitous, and everyone – everyone – exuded nothing but sincerity.

Parishioners at most parishes appreciate their priests for their dedicated service and sacrifices, but at the churches in Sidney and Cincinnati, where he served at the beginning of his priesthood and right before coming to Columbus as bishop, respectively, there seemed to be an even greater appreciation, in part because they could see this man is extraordinarily gifted and talented.

He’s an academic, but he never makes anyone feel like he’s an elitist. His brothers say he is academically blessed but humble. The new bishop breezed through high school, college and two years of medical school before he decided to pursue a calling to the sacrament of Holy Orders.

Some people are smart and want you to know it. Not so in this case. He can carry on a conversation about Ohio State football or which restaurant offers the best chicken wings as easily as he can discuss moral theology and medical ethics.

The defining characteristic of this man, though, can be traced to his family and his upbringing.

His devout parents, Sydney and Thelma, instilled in their five sons that their Catholic faith took precedence. Rosary, Chaplet of Divine Mercy, Litany of Loreto, Angelus, Regina Coeli were everyday parts of life and were non-negotiable, whether the boys wanted to pray or not.

Sunday Mass was never missed, and daily Mass and Adoration of the Blessed Sacrament were big parts of their lives.

His parents also lived simply and humbly. They came to the United States from India in 1970 with only a few dollars in their pocket and the promise of a better life in America, leaving behind their relatives.

Sydney was a highly respected physician, but the family did not live a life of privilege. He resided in a small house in a poor neighborhood on the east side of the city until the boys were teenagers.

The five brothers will tell you they weren’t saints. They engaged in mischief like most boys. When they did, they had to answer for it to their parents.

In school, the five were stalwarts, all graduating from Toledo St. Francis de Sales High School. Three became medical doctors, one a judge and the other now a bishop who spent two years in medical school.

As a career standpoint, they are high achievers.

At the installation and ordination Mass on Tuesday, May 31, at Westerville St. Paul Church, the four brothers and their families watched with joy as their brother and uncle joined the successors of the Apostles. One brother, Trevor, is a deacon in the Ukrainian Catholic Church and proclaimed the Gospel during the Mass.

Sadly, the bishop’s beloved parents weren’t able to share this moment in person. Sydney died in 2019 at age 82. Thelma has been in and out of the hospital in the Toledo area with health issues and suffering from dementia. She was too ill to travel.

She did, however, receive the news of his appointment as bishop from her son, Earl, firsthand before it was announced to the public on April 2. Then-Bishop-elect Fernandes made a special trip to see her.

Several weeks later, one of the bishop’s brothers, Ashley, visited her and asked if she was excited about Earl becoming a bishop. He wasn’t sure whether she would remember hearing about it, but she broke out in a big smile, confirming that she understood.

Now that the installation and ordination are over, the new bishop will dive into his role. His calendar is already filled for the next month and beyond.

He’ll face challenges and decisions as a new member of the Church hierarchy. Some will be difficult.

He’ll be asked to speak with a prophetic and thoughtful voice for the diocese on issues such as shortages of vocations, violence, abortion, euthanasia, poverty, potential parish closings and mergers and the like.

But from all accounts, he’ll be up to the challenge. He’ll doubt be guided by faith and reason – the bedrocks of a firm foundation that began with nurturing from his parents.

As he begins a new ministry, pray for him.
Congratulations
BISHOP
Earl K. Fernandes

We will miss your joyful witness, incredible intellect, unflagging energy, and concern for all people, but know that these traits will serve you well as you expand your ministry to shepherd the faithful people of the Diocese of Columbus.

Schools filled with anticipation about new bishop

Officials of the diocese’s elementary and secondary schools who met Bishop Earl Fernandes before his ordination were impressed with the message he brought them and with his readiness to work with them in the coming school year.

Bishop Fernandes visited school administrators for their annual May meeting at the Pontifical College Josephinum. He celebrated Mass for them and talked with them individually during the meeting’s lunch break.

“It was a particularly meaningful gesture that Bishop Fernandes was able to join Catholic school administrators from all around the diocese for our May meeting and Mass,” said Stephanie Paul-Tibero, assistant principal at Westerville St. Paul School, who will move to Newark Catholic High School in the same position when classes resume in the fall.

“During what is certain to be a most busy time for him, he offered Mass and, through his homily, touched many hearts. He talked about the profundity of a young boy in Italy who was asked by a priest to identify Jesus in the church and stated plainly that while the crucifix looked like Jesus, that was not truly Him. The boy went on to share that in the tabernacle resides Jesus, who (in the form of a consecrated host) does not look like our Savior, but truly is.

“Every day in our Catholic schools, we are firsthand observers of these moments. The homily was a reminder and a moment of renewal for me in my call to be a Catholic educator and leader.”

“His presentation of the Holy Eucharist was a visible celebration,” said Columbus St. Charles Preparatory School principal Jim Lower. “I look forward to seeing Bishop Fernandes when he is in Columbus. His short time with all of our administrators was uplifting and invigorating. What an exciting time we have to look forward to in Columbus!”

“He has made his commitment to Catholic education clear in very strong terms,” said diocesan school Superintendent Adam Dufault. “He is coming to Columbus with experience as an educator and as pastor of a church with a large elementary school. I was impressed with his own experience in Catholic schools. He’s very eager to dive in and to lead our schools into the future. Enrollment in the schools for the 2022-2023 academic year is trending upward as more people see the ways Catholic schools are different and make a difference.”

Bishop Fernandes also has visited the diocesan Schools Office in the Catholic Center in downtown Columbus.

Seth Burkholder, the office’s associate director for data analysis, said, “When I first heard that he was going to take the time to drive up from Cincinnati to visit the diocesan office and meet with each diocesan employee in their office, it reminded me of a quote from St. Therese of Lisieux: ‘Miss no single opportunity of making some small sacrifice, here by a smiling look, there by a kindly word; always doing the smallest right and doing it all for love.’

“That act of sacrifice and love made all that much more sense when I personally met with him and he talked of his family’s devotion to St. Therese.”

Burkholder also said he was impressed by Bishop Fernandes’ devotion to the Virgin Mary. “This is going to be a very Marian diocese going forward,” he said.

Burkholder said the new bishop “not only checks all the boxes that you have. He checks the boxes you didn’t realize you had. He is very pro-life and, coming from a family full of doctors and with (the possibility of the U.S. Supreme Court overturning its) Roe v. Wade (decision), the timing of his election to be a bishop in the United States could not be more perfect.

“We need leaders like this in the Catholic Church in the United States at this time and place.”

He said Bishop Fernandes’ ability to recall people, places and events “reminds me of another great bishop, Pope St. John Paul II. Given that he is a fast talker, I wonder if he will say Mass as fast as Cardinal (Timothy) Dolan (of New York City).”

A joint statement issued by Cristo Rey Columbus High School principal Ryan Michelle Pettit and Joseph Patrick, president of the school, said, “The students, faculty, staff, and board of Cristo Rey Columbus High School rejoice at the appointment of Bishop Fernandes to the Diocese of Columbus.

“As a diverse Catholic school, with students of color making up 92 percent of enrollment and 50 percent of students being first-generation Americans, Bishop Fernandes’ appointment as the first Indian-American bishop (in the United States) is embraced and celebrated. We look forward to working with the bishop in continuing to provide opportunities for Columbus’ students, especially those in underserved communities.”

Bishop Fernandes familiar with Josephinum

By Tim Puet For The Catholic Times

When he was ordained as bishop of the Diocese of Columbus, Bishop Earl Fernandes automatically became vice chancellor of the Pontifical College Josephinum. That position would have given him a seat on the college’s 21-member board of trustees had he not already been a member.

Father Steven Beseau, the college’s rector/president, appointed then-Father Fernandes to the board in 2019, the year Father Beseau was chosen for his current position. The two have known each other since 2005, when both were working on doctorates in Rome.

Bishop Fernandes was dean of Mount St. Mary’s Seminary of the West in Cincinnati from 2008-2016. Shortly before leaving there for a post with the office of the Vatican’s apostolic nuncio in Washington, he hired Father Beseau to teach moral theology at the seminary, where he remained until coming to the Josephinum.

“Even before Bishop Fernandes was appointed to the board of the Josephinum, I relied on him as an informal consultant to help me in my work as rector/president,” Father Beseau said.

“When he returned to the Archdiocese of Cincinnati to become pastor of a parish, that provided me an opportunity to ask the board if they would consider bringing him on as a member.

“Bishop Fernandes brings his experience as a priest, pastor, theologian, academic dean and a staff member of the apostolic nunciature. He has proven himself to be an invaluable member of the board of trustees, and I am so grateful that he will continue to serve as a member of the board and as vice chancellor.”

Bishop Steven Raica of the Diocese of Birmingham, Alabama, vice chair of the Josephinum board, said, “Bishop Fernandes is a man of joyful faith with a passion for priests and priestly formation. He relates love and enthusiasm for the Church. His position on the board can best be seen through this lens.

“He is a disciple whose encounter with Christ is real and life-changing. His ubiquitous smile exudes the joy of the Gospel about which Pope Francis often speaks.

“For that reason, he offers the board, as well as those in formation (for the priesthood at the seminary), an excitement for responding generously to the call of God, i.e., the call to holiness and a life lived freely and fully for Christ.”

Father Michael Lumpe, vice rector of the Josephinum’s College of Liberal Arts and a priest of the Diocese of Columbus, has known Bishop Fernandes for several years through their mutual friendship with Msgr. Frank Lane, another Columbus diocesan priest, who is a former teacher at Mount St. Mary’s and lives in retirement in Cincinnati.

“Bishop Fernandes is incredibly capable in any number of ways, a true man of the Church. He has excellent skills dealing with people and as an administrator. He’s full of energy and drive, a good listener and will make an excellent shepherd for the diocese.

“From a priest’s point of view, he has been a priest for 20 years and, having been pastor of a large parish, he knows what it takes to lead a parish. I’m sure he will be taking the time to learn the history of the diocese and its people and all that is needed for him to be able to deal with the future necessities of the diocese.

“He also will assist in increasing the number of vocations to the priesthood in the diocese. He already knows a number of bishops and vocations directors in other dioceses, and that should bode well for adding to the number of dioceses who send candidates for the priesthood to the Josephinum for their formation.”

Father William Hahn, vocations director for the Diocese of Columbus, is in residence at the Josephinum and also knows the bishop through connections with Msgr. Lane.

“I think he’s very holy and very intelligent,” Father Hahn said of the new bishop. “He met with most of the priests of the diocese for the first time when they had an already scheduled meeting at Reynoldsburg St. Pius X Church in July, and it was most significant that he was there – not so much for what he said as for his just being there and showing he’s interested in what’s on the minds and in the hearts of the priests.

“He knows a lot of people and is in contact with a lot of resources. One of the first things he asked me as vocations director was if I could get all the seminarians of the diocese together for a gathering separate from the annual priests’ and seminarians’ picnic in August. We’re trying to do that in July. He also asked me about any prospective priests I was working with, so he’s ready to assist with encouraging vocations.”

Father Jeff Rimelspach is pastor of Columbus St. Margaret of Cortona Church, a position in which he succeeded Msgr. Lane. He is in his ninth and final year as a Josephinum trustee. He was appointed to the post for a three-year term in 2013 and has served two additional terms since then. Nine years is the maximum term for a board member.

“Bishop Fernandes is a very happy man with a friendly disposition and is comfortable around a variety of people,” Father Rimelspach said. “You can tell the joy he gets from being a priest.

“He’s very well-organized, able to assimilate a lot of information quickly and act on it wisely. He was asked to perform a number of tasks as a member of the board’s vision and mission committee and followed through on them very competently.

“He’s enthusiastic about the future of the Josephinum and of priesthood in general. A special charism of his is the desire to train good priests.”

Archbishop Christophe Pierre, the Vatican’s apostolic nuncio to the United States, is chancellor of the Josephinum by virtue of his position. Bishop James Wall of the Diocese of Gallup, New Mexico, is chairman of the board of trustees, whose members are appointed by the rector/president.

Other board members, besides Fathers Beseau and Rimelspach and Bishops Fernandes and Raica, are:

Former Columbus Bishop Robert Brennan, now bishop of the Diocese of Brooklyn, New York; Bishops Shawn McKnight of Jefferson City, Missouri and Jeffrey Monforton of Steubenville; Auxiliary Bishop Richard Henning of Rockville Centre, New York; Father Josh Altonji, Diocese of Birmingham; Sister Anne Catherine Burleigh, OP, Nashville, Tennessee.

Sister Anthony Mary Diago, RSM, Phoenix; Deacon Stephen Petrill, psychology professor, Ohio State University; Josephinum vice president for administration John Erwin; Josephinum faculty members Perry Cahall and Douglas Fortner; Charles Bramlage, chief executive officer, Yamo Pharmaceuticals, Columbus.

Rick Jeric, former Columbus diocesan development director and former president/CEO of the Women’s Care Center in Columbus, now executive director of the Catholic Foundation of the Diocese of La Crosse, Wisconsin; J. David Karam, president of the Sbarro restaurant group in Dublin; and Catholic author, speaker and broadcaster Patrick Madrid of Granville.

We look forward to his leadership and want him to know of our support in any manner he sees fit. We pray that the Good Shepherd pours out His Grace on him. May He Bless and Keep Bishop Fernandes always.” – Leonard Barbe, KM, Columbus Region Hospitaller of the Order of Malta

“The Serra Clubs of Columbus and North Columbus joyfully welcome Bishop Fernandes; we are excited to join with him and all the faithful in prayerfully supporting and promoting a culture of religious vocations in our Diocese.” – Serra Clubs of Columbus
Q&A: Parental influence, education reform, joy of Catholicism

By Doug Bean
Catholic Times Editor

Bishop Earl Fernandes sat down with The Catholic Times for a 90-minute interview at his former parish, St. Ignatius of Loyola in Cincinnati, several weeks ago as he was preparing to transition to the Diocese of Columbus.

Bishop Fernandes, an Ohio native, grew up in Toledo, started medical school at the University of Cincinnati before discerning a call to the priesthood, and was ordained for the Archdiocese of Cincinnati in 2002.

His assignments have included Holy Angels Church in Sidney, Ohio; academic dean and instructor at Mount St. Mary’s Seminary of the West in Cincinnati; Apostolic Nunciature in Washington, D.C.; and St. Ignatius. He also has served as a parish administrator and on the Board of Trustees at the Pontifical College Josephinum.

The following are excerpts from that discussion:

Q: What has your life been like since the announcement of your appointment as bishop, and what reaction have you had? Has anything surprised you?

A: The announcement became public a little bit after 6 in the morning on April 2. Probably around 9:30, I left my brother’s house in Dublin to head down to the Chancery offices. And up to that point, between 6 in the morning and 9:30, in addition to taking about four or five phone calls, I answered 130 text messages and 40 emails.

As soon as the press conference was over, I had another 60 emails and 150 text messages. And so I spent a lot of time that day doing nothing but answering emails and text messages.

Then coming back to the parish that weekend, my people here at St. Ignatius are very happy for the Diocese of Columbus, very happy for me. I would say that I was probably more shocked than they were. They were saying, “Oh, Father, we all knew this was going to happen someday. We just didn’t want it to be so soon.” And then there were a lot of tears being shed. That’s just a sign of, not necessarily my greatness, but people’s love for their priest.

Q: Were most of the texts and emails from family and friends?

A: Some, but also I have family in India, and I have a cousin in Tampa and three cousins in Canada. Everybody else is over there. And three of my four brothers went to medical school at Ohio State (University) so there are a lot of people in the Columbus area I knew. I was also very good friends with Msgr. Frank Lane, a priest of Columbus but retired living here in Cincinnati. And so through him, I’ve met a number of laypeople in Columbus, and a number of priests of Columbus, all of whom were ecstatic.

Maybe it’s just the joy of knowing we’re going to have a shepherd, and there’s a lot of decisions eventually that’ll need to be made in Columbus. I think people are happy that the period from Bishop (Robert) Brennan’s appointment to Brooklyn and then his departure from Columbus until now was not actually going to be that long.

Q: Is it easier for you knowing a little bit about Columbus?

A: My brothers know Columbus very well, but I know Toledo well. I know Cincinnati well. I have friends in Steubenville. I know those places better than I know Columbus. Columbus, of course, has experienced tremendous growth and will continue to grow. I have about 35 former students who I taught when they were in high school and have moved to the Columbus area, and now they’re married. They have children. Some of the weddings I have in the Columbus area, St. Mary’s in German Village or St. Leo’s or St. Patrick’s, and even at the cathedral. So in that sense, there’ll be kind of a base of support that does help. It won’t be completely strange, but I’m going to have a great learning curve. I’ll be eager to get out to the parishes and meet the people and meet the priests of Columbus on a wider scale.

A: I would say it’s very different from Cincinnati in this sense. Cincinnati is a very old diocese, which had a lot of religious orders and a lot of Catholic schools. And so at one point, the city of Cincinnati was maybe 40% Catholic. Especially here on the west side, people will ask, “Where are you from?” They’ll say St. Teresa, St. William, St. Lawrence. They identify their neighborhood with the parish church. I’m not sure that that’s the case in Columbus.

Cincinnati has a rural area, and the archdiocese includes the cities of Dayton, Springfield and Cincinnati, but Columbus had a much smaller Catholic population. The presence of male and female religious is much lower. Catholicism has really grown in part because the population of Columbus has grown, so the geographic distances in Columbus are a little bit different, and the size of the parishes are a little bit different.

I am familiar with Columbus a little bit through the Josephinum. I’ve been on the board now for almost two years. Most of my experience of Columbus has been when my brothers were in medical school. They went to St. Patrick’s, so that’s kind of a kind of a Catholic hub for young adults. But then also they knew Msgr. Frank Lane. They would go to St. Andrew in Upper Arlington.

I’m part of the Communion and Liberation movement here in Cincinnati. We have a community here at the parish and another one at the University of Cincinnati. I’m happy to know that there’s a small contingent of members of Communion and Liberation here in the Diocese of Columbus. The Dominican Fathers of the Eastern Province, the novitiate is here in Cincinnati. So when the friars are young, they all come through here and for many years I was academic dean (at Mount St. Mary’s of the West Seminary) and had a very good relationship with the Dominicans. I’m happy with their presence in the Diocese of Columbus, but mostly I need to get to know the diocese.

The Ann Arbor Dominicans, Mary Mother of the Eucharist have arrived relatively recently, and there are probably other religious orders that I will need to get to know. The Dominican Sisters of Buffalo are now moved to Newark. I know the Sisters of the Children of Mary very well.

So they’re up in Newark, and then I’m the regular confessor for the Sisters of the Children of Mary in Cincinnati. And I’m sure there are many others. I know Bishop Brennan brought in the Mercedarians, who I knew a little bit about from Philadelphia, but they’re just getting settled there. So there is a growing movement. The Pallottine Fathers and several of the female religious orders have come in in the last few years.

I think a big difference is probably the presence of schools. You know, practically every parish in the Cincinnati archdiocese has a Catholic school until you get to the northern part of the diocese. In the northern part, they didn’t have so many Catholic schools because there were nuns teaching in the public schools and the towns were entirely Catholic. … You have those five big schools in Columbus, but it’s not as big throughout.

Q: How do you build up Catholic education?

A: Catholic education provided my brothers and me with a strong foundation. We had religion every single day. We also had great parents who also taught us religion at home. So we got the faith, as did many of those classmates of mine with whom I grew up. It’s important to get people in the pipeline, particularly with what’s happening in public education today, with gender ideology with all those sorts of things, to have the Catholic voice being heard – not just one voice amongst others but an authoritative voice so that there can be a fundamental anthropology and the essentials of the faith.

We have a teacher-minister contract for all our Catholic school teachers so that you know the teacher is a spiritual leader within the classroom. At St. Ignatius, for example, we have a thing called the School of Faith where one Friday of the month the teachers don’t teach. They have a day that’s like an in-service day, and they have nothing but faith formation, which I think is essential because any Catholic school ought to be presenting, in my mind, the Catholic faith in its integrity.

And the measure of success is not whether people go on to private school or get into a better high school or college. The measure of success is whether those children are at Sunday Mass and have regular sacramental life and are growing in virtue and holiness. And if we don’t do that, or if we do the opposite, then we have undermined the reason for the existence of Catholic schools and Catholic education.

And so we really want to cultivate this... strong sense of Catholic identity in our Catholic schools. Personally, I’m not very interested in private education for the very wealthy that excludes the poor. I want accessibility to Catholic education, education that’s truly Catholic, that’s Catholic first.

Q: Has Ohio’s EdChoice program brought more access to people who cannot afford Catholic education?

A: Here at St. Ignatius, we have 1,160 kids at our elementary school. EdChoice is important when you have failing school districts, but our campus is also an inclusion school, so that students with disabilities, learning disabilities or physical disabilities can come in part because there’s a lot of Peterson (special needs) scholarship money available.

And then EdChoice makes Catholic education available for a lot of children who live in poor neighborhoods. So those areas where Catholics once lived but moved away to the suburbs, those parishes have parish schools. Those schools are sustained in part by EdChoice, but what we’re seeing in some of those regions is that these aren’t just non-Catholics attending the school. In some regions, for example, there are poor, working class Catholics or Latinos who are moving who don’t necessarily have the tradition of coming to a Catholic school, but now Catholic schools are becoming available, and their presence can help increase the Catholic identity of those schools.

Q: Are those evangelization opportunities?

A: Absolutely. If you have a Catholic school, the purpose of the Catholic school is to further the mission of the Church, and the mission of the Church is evangelization to mediate the presence of Christ in the human reality in society, in the classroom, in the family.

My friend, Father (Mark) Watkins, he’s pastor over at St. Lawrence (in Cincinnati), and what he found was, he had a lot of EdChoice students in his school, many of whom have parents who were Catholic, but the children hadn’t been baptized. And so this was a way of introducing those children to the faith and to the sacramental life of the Church. And so they get into a regular rhythm.

My experience has been many children go to Catholic schools, but they don’t come to Mass, unfortunately, or they come to Mass but they don’t know what’s going on. But my experience with the Catechism of the Good Shepherd program is children interacting with things, learning their Bible stories. They learn how to be silent, they learn how to pray.

The purpose of education is not simply to give them the right answers, but rather it’s to train the mind to think critically and to make judgments. And so to teach them how to ask the right questions, and then to use reason, along with faith, but to use the reason in order to discover the truth and to appropriate it.

We want to say here’s the Catechism, learn these things, but it doesn’t impact people’s lives. We want education to facilitate a personal encounter with Jesus Christ that changes your life. So Pope Benedict XVI, in the very first paragraph of his first encyclical, Deus Caritas Est, said being a Christian is not a result of an ethical choice or a lofty idea. It’s a result of an encounter with an event or person that opens up new horizons and gives our life a decisive direction.

Well, that’s what Catholic education ought to do – facilitate the encounter with Jesus Christ and through his Church that gives our life a decisive direction that opens up new horizons and new possibilities about how to live.

When Pope Benedict opened the Year of Faith, 10 years ago now, he talked about different dimensions of faith. Faith is taking a stand with Christ so as to live with Christ. And I think too often we have head knowledge but we don’t have a heart that can see or act, or people react with feelings but without using reason, and we descend into a type of emotivism. Catholicism really sees the compatibility between faith and reason.

Q: One overriding concern from people is: Why did my children, or myself, who have had Catholic education, stray from the faith?

A: People still have a funny idea that there’s still tons of priests and nuns in the Catholic schools teaching religion from the Baltimore Catechism. And that era ended two generations ago. I think there’s also so many parents who rely on the schools to educate their children in the way of faith. But this is why it’s so important to form the formators, to form the teachers in the Catholic faith so that they can present it accurately.

What I find is people my age are parents, and they’re saying, “You know, my children are questioning me, but I don’t know how to explain this stuff to my children.” And when I think about what was actually taught in Catholic schools in our religion classes when I was a child it was, the answer to every question was God is love. Well, I know God is love. Because we got no content in our religion classes, people in this church are finding it difficult to explain these truths to their children. The textbooks now are much better. But the challenges are different. And so the parents can’t really go through the textbook because, unfortunately, they don’t always have the information themselves or they don’t know how to explain it in a coherent manner. So we have to get back to sometimes the basics, the basic proclamation of the faith.

I think a second thing is the way in which we teach the faith, for the most part, should be from the point of view of assent to these truths. So we have to try to say, OK, how can we present these truths in a way in which the children can understand but in a way with the mind and the heart of the Church rather than from the position of dissent, like question everything. You need some structure, but I’m going to train your mind how to think critically and ask the question. Otherwise, to say question everything, or this is my point of view, that’s different from what the Church actually teaches. It becomes an ideology, and that’s not education.

more than 10 years, and it’s making a profound difference in how children speak about themselves, they understand some of the basic concepts of the Theology of the Body, that I was made to be a gift to others. I need to give myself to another, that I am not to be treated as an object but as a person. They understand some basic concept of human dignity. Now, the children come back with this knowledge, but the parents don’t understand. So we need to do much more in the way of adult faith formation.

I want to reiterate that parents are the primary educators and teachers in the way of faith. And so this is also how laypeople live their vocation in the world to take this seriously. I’m a primary educator, not the priest, not the nun. I, as a father, I, as mother, I’m an educator. Am I putting in the same effort in to teach my child of faith as I am to say that they’re successful soccer or tennis or basketball players? Am I putting the same effort into them learning the faith, nourishing them spiritually, as I am into preparing the family meal?

I think these are some of the things that parents can assume their responsibility, and I want to help parents to assume their responsibility. Let’s put the tools in their hands so they can. I think family-based catechesis is one direction that can help do this.

We have a lot of PSR (Parish School of Religion) students that come in, but next year here in our parish we’re going to start switching so that once a month, parents will come for classes, and then they’ll have a couple of weeks where they’re not going to come in for class but they’ll have to do it at home. It turns things back to the parents to work at religion with their children.

My father was a physician. My mother was a stay-at-home mom of five boys born between 1966 and 1973. But they taught us our religion. I mean, my father would come back tired having worked long, long shifts, and he takes us one by one down in the basement and review’s the questions in the Baltimore Catechism with us so that we knew them. And we prayed the family rosary every night.

So I think these are some of the challenges, but the culture, we have to acknowledge, is much less supportive of faith than it was 20 years ago or 40 years ago. And so the rapid secularization, mobility of people the use of new technologies brings with it its own challenges. And so we have to use the new media, I think, in a way to evangelize. But we also have to learn that technology has its place. And we need to also learn how to put the phone away and shut the TV off and to be still – silence to hear God’s voice and to be able to pray. And I think this is the lost art, the art of being still. The art of silence. There has to be a deep commitment to prayer and to silence and, and I can’t force that on anyone but I can tell you St. Alphonsus Liguori says he who prays will be saved, and he does not will certainly be condemned. If God is lost, all is lost. But if we lose sight of God, if we lose sight of God made in man’s image and likeness worthy of care and respect, and that’s why we see so much dehumanization today and what the pope laments is the throwaway culture.

Q: Was the example of your parents key in your faith formation?

A: Absolutely. I got a nice card from some people in Toledo. Their oldest son was best friends with my older brother Karl. Their youngest son was best friends with my youngest brother Eustace, and they attributed this (being named bishop) in their words to my saintly parents. And there’s a truth there.

I would be nothing without my parents, what they gave us, and I would see this when my friends would come over to our house, and we’d have to pray the family rosary. Our friend would have to pray right along with us, and they didn’t know the Our Father or the Hail Mary. And so I realize this, this is why we see so different and very, very special.

The person went on to write, “I remember your mother kissing your hands when you were ordained a priest.” And so this is the type of devotion that my parents had, the reverence they had for priests.

So I had very saintly parents who lived the life. It wasn’t that faith was something extrinsic to their lives, and they had internalized it.

Q: Did you realize that growing up?

A: I realized it growing up. My brothers don’t remember this incident, and maybe because they were in bed, but I remember we went to bed, and I couldn’t get to sleep. Lent in our house was somewhat severe. We prayed the Stations of the Cross every Friday as a family in addition to the rosary. We took our abstinence from meat, but we did it like Wednesdays and Fridays, like the old Ember days as well.

My mother was a great cook, and she would make us shrimp curry and rice and lots of Indian dishes that are vegetarian so it was, and she was a fantastic cook. But I remember once, we boys never ate with our parents. So we boys ate, my father had his cup of tea, then we prayed the family rosary, and then we usually would have a fruit or milk or something and go off to bed.

I remember once I couldn’t sleep, and I came down sort of spying on my parents. My father went over to the refrigerator, and he pulled up two eggs, like hard-boiled eggs, from the refrigerator and put them on the scale. And the larger one he gave to my mother for her supper, and smaller one he took for himself. And that was their way of life. And so these things you realize as a child, and later on it moves you to want to be more like that.

I wish I had my parents’ faith. I wish I was as committed to holiness as they were.

Q: People have said that you seem to have an affinity for hospital ministry and being there when people don’t expect it. How do you do that?

A: My father was a physician. So he had the bedside manner. I myself was in medical school. My brothers are physicians; this is what they do. And so I think probably some of that I caught from them growing up in a big family, growing up in a poor neighborhood. You realize what it is to be human fundamentally. And how to treat people with care and respect.

Like, what does this person need as a priest? How can I mediate the presence of Christ to them. Part of being a priest is being radically available.

So during the pandemic, Mercy West Hospital, which is huge, they weren’t letting those above age 60 do pastoral care. And I was the only priest on this end of town under age 60. So I was going over there sometimes two or three times a day, but the doctors and nurses were familiar with me. I was very respectful of the protocols they put in place. I tried to do what I could when I could.

You answer (calls) in the middle of the night. There’s a snowstorm and ice storm, everything shut down, somebody’s dying. You walk across the field, the roads are shut down, you walk across the field, the ice, to bring them the sacraments, because Jesus laid down his life for his friends, and the least we can do is get cold. And what a difference it makes doing small, little things.

One of our staff members, her mother was dying right around Christmas, and I went to the house and was just there and brought a smile to a woman’s face and brought her the sacraments and the comfort it brings. And it’s not really me. It’s Jesus at work. Sometimes through Him and through His defective instruments, sometimes through the perfect instruments he’s given his Church and the sacraments.

I love going to an assisted living facility. Every Wednesday, my assistant and I go there and have Mass, and they’re faithful people. Sometimes people feel like, “I’m here by myself. Nobody comes to visit me, nobody writes.” And to see their desire for Mass and the sacraments, to see their faith is great. And so the presence of the priest, the presence of Catholic doctors and nurses, the presence of family affirms their dignity.

Q: Is that one of the most joyful things you do as a priest, being there and giving them the last sacraments?

A: I hope they remember me when they get to heaven. You know, I have my sins and my failings, and I hope that they say, “But Lord, remember He did this for me.” I hope.

When I got here, already there had been a tradition of hearing confessions because originally there was a pastor and an assistant and then two retired priests in residence, so they had confession available pretty regularly. When I got here, I decided, let’s share confession every single day after morning Mass. So that’s what we do, and people come.

So making oneself radically available for the sacraments is very important. And if you have it, people will come.

Q: People mentioned that smile you always have and joy for the priesthood. Where does that come from?

A: First of all, it’s the joy of being loved by Jesus Christ and knowing His love and experiencing His love in spite of all my sins, in spite of my faults and failings. That’s the one certainty I have in this world is that I am loved by God, and that brings joy to my heart.

I also think that in spite of my nothingness, God still called me to the priesthood. He gave me this gift. And that brings joy to me that he loved me enough to give me the gift of the priesthood. But I also say the happiest day of my life was my First Communion day, because I always had a question in my mind. I was a little shorter than some of them. Do you love me as much as the taller kids? Our skin was brown and not white. Do you love me as much as the white kids? We were in a poor neighborhood. Do you love us as much as the rich kids?

All these questions were going through my child’s mind. And on my First Communion day, that question was answered. And that day I was happy. So when I say Mass, I see upon the altar the One who loved me, and the One who still loves me and who will always love me. And I can look at Him, and He’s a real person there. And He gazes at me, and I gaze on Him, and that brings me joy. At Mass, my brothers sometimes wonder, “What are you smiling at? You look like a dork when you’re smiling.” But that’s OK.

Q: One diocesan priest said one of your first messages for them was about celebrating the Mass with great reverence and having great devotion to the Eucharistic Lord. What drives that message?

A: I learned that from my parents. They came from India right around the time of the Second Vatican Council, but it wasn’t such a radical shift there as what they experienced when they came to the United States. We learned the difference between reverence and irreverence, especially when we misbehaved in church. And so we learned how to be quiet and still and reverent in the presence of God.

And then we were exposed to the Church’s wider tradition in terms of liturgical music and reverence in the way Mass ought to be offered. And so that has affected my whole life. I have a great love for Gregorian chant, for sacred polyphony, all these sorts of things that are part of Church music, but also the need for silence, the mode of reception of Communion.

Q: What led to your vocation? Did it hit you suddenly or was it gradual?

A: Always in the back of my mind I had a sense of the call, even though I never said anything about it, but I was an altar boy. I served Mass. I liked being in church. I liked saying my prayers. It was important to our regular family life and structure.

When I was a junior in college, I studied abroad in England. And I thought, Well, I’m not under my parents’ roof. Now this is probably when I would have started skipping Mass, but I found that in England the thing that was most normal, most regular, was the Mass, most familiar to me.

And there was an Irish priest, Father Ian Kelly, he was a chaplain there, and he was a great preacher. I found myself not only not skipping Mass but going every day. (He said,) “Earl, come in here, you’re looking like a bishop, you’re sitting there looking like a bishop.” “And that’s funny that you say that, Father, because I’d like to talk to you about becoming a priest.”

And so we talked, and it was December of 1992. And we were taking trains on those Eurolines passes all over Europe, but I stopped in Rome around Christmas time. I was with my best friend from high school and went to St. Peter’s Basilica. And for the first time I saw the stained-glass window of the Holy Spirit, and all of a sudden my heart started to beat very quickly, and then I looked over to my right and there was Michelangelo’s Pietà, and we toured around the basilica and went down into the Crypt of the Popes, and I came to the tomb of St. Peter and fell to my knees.

And at that moment, I knew in my heart of hearts, God is calling me to be a priest. But what did I do? I came back to America, I took my MCAT (Medical College Admission Test). I got back together with my old girlfriend. I did anything I could to avoid my vocation, and I moved to Cincinnati. I was going to medical school, and I wasn’t happy.

And then one day I went up for weekday Mass. I went to the Italian church, and I went to Mass, and the priest said a fast Mass, and I hadn’t left an hour for Communion. So after Mass I went to Father and said, “You kind of said a fast Mass; could I receive Communion?” He grudgingly went to the tabernacle, and he said, “God doesn’t wear a wristwatch.” I said, “I know that, Father, but that’s what my parents taught me.”

And I received Communion on the tongue, and he said, “You need to get over that.” And I said, “What?” And he said, “Receiving Communion on the tongue.” I said, “Well, it’s a legitimate option. And this is how my parents taught me, and it was good enough for them and good enough for my grandparents, and so it was good enough for me.”

But one thing led to another, and we got into a series of discussions, but basically he denied the Mass was a sacrifice and non-Catholics and non-Christians should be able to receive Communion and many other things that shook my faith. Probably the only time in my life that my faith was shaken.

And so I said, “Well, I need to go where it’s safe.” I went to the newspaper, and I saw a Traditional Latin Mass authorized by the archbishop of Cincinnati at Sacred Heart Church. I realized it was in walking distance from where I lived, but I didn’t go to the Latin Mass there. Two elderly Italian priests came out and had Mass in English. It was a beautiful church, dimly lit church, and they didn’t preach. They just said Mass, and they looked happy.

And I thought I could be that old and be a priest and be happy. And so I said, “I’m going to talk to that priest.” I talked to the younger of the two, Father Mario. He was 75. And he was celebrating his 50th anniversary as a priest. He came to the United States as a missionary in 1945. We had a number of discussions. And so then I thought, OK, my courage is up. I’m going to call the vocations director.

I called the vocations director in Cincinnati, and I told him my story and said, “I don’t know if I want to be a doctor or a priest or both.” And so he said, “You want to go find out.” And so he raised funds for me to go to a house in Rome called the Casa Balthasar, which was a house of spiritual discernment. So 1996-97 I was there to discern my vocation. After a year there, I discerned God’s calling me to be a priest. And so I entered the seminary in Cincinnati in 1997, and I was ordained in 2002.

Q: We’re facing a crisis in vocations. How can we help?

A: I was very disappointed to hear that there are no priestly ordinations in Columbus this year and only one next year. Archbishop (Dennis) Schnurr (in 2010 when he became Cincinnati’s archbishop) immediately wrote a vocations prayer, and that is prayed in every
St. Paul Parish and School wish to congratulate Bishop Fernandes and welcome him to our diocese. We pray that God will bless him with every grace needed to be our shepherd.
Bishop Earl Fernandes attributes his ascent to the episcopacy to devoted parents in Toledo who put the Catholic faith first and foremost in their lives and of their five sons.

He realized early on the gift his parents had given him and his brothers. The family lived their faith at home, in church and at school – and it was evident at a young age that Earl might be on track to have a vocation to the priesthood, though he might not have realized it at the time.

In a recent interview, he recalled a prediction that his eighth-grade classmates made that young Earl would become the Catholic Church’s first pope born in America.

He went on to graduate No. 2 in his class in 1990 from Toledo St. Francis de Sales High School, served by the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales order of priests, and then moved on to the University of Toledo for undergraduate studies in biology, graduating in 1994.

“We had religious brothers and priests teaching us not just religion but calculus and physics and chemistry, and so I thought it was perfectly normal to consider a priestly vocation,” Bishop Fernandes said of his high school. “When I was a junior in religion class, we were asked, ‘Have you ever thought about being a priest?’ And I checked ‘yes,’ because I thought about it. ‘Would you like to receive literature?’ I thought, why not.

“When it came to the house, my dad and I talked about it a little bit. But in my mother’s mind, she would have us pray that you would be a good boy, a tall boy, and a doctor like my dad. People respect doctors, and medicine is a noble profession. And my thought was, OK, that’s what I’m going to do even though I had this sense of the call.”

“I didn’t have him in class, but I knew him well,” said Father Ron Olszewski, OSFS, who was principal at St. Francis de Sales when Bishop Fernandes was a student there. “I knew all of the brothers, and the family was a wonderful Catholic family. They were all very, very good students.”

He recalled that Bishop Fernandes took several advanced placement courses and was involved in “academic” activities that included the yearbook and newspaper staffs, the debate team and chess club.

“They were all academic things, but I would not describe him as a reclusive nerd,” Father Olszewski said. “He was just a very intelligent person with a bent toward those kinds of extracurricular activities.”

One of the qualities that resonated with the former principal, who is still involved with the high school, is the smile that has become one of Bishop Fernandes’ trademarks.

“Great personality, and I remember him always having a smile, even after he was ordained,” Father Olszewski said. “I think that is absolutely wonderful that you’re going to have a bishop who is happy.

“Peace and joy are two of the most frequently used words in the New Testament. And if you have a bishop that exudes peace, joy, happiness in his vocation, I think that’s great.”

After high school, the future priest’s next stop was medical school at the University of Cincinnati, where he hoped to follow in the footsteps of his physician father and brothers.

BISHOP EARL FERNANDES

Know that the Serra Clubs of Columbus pray for you, and all the priests, deacons, religious and seminarians of our Diocese!

We wait with great anticipation to see how the Spirit moves you within our Diocese!

“More important than Ohio State football, if we could speak of such a thing, is the Gospel of Jesus Christ!”

A: I think so, and not just the liturgy. The Church has a great musical tradition and artistic tradition.

Q: Have your experiences as a priest prepared you to serve as a bishop?

A: In Sidney, I learned a lot of things. One is that people still had faith. My thought was, part of the problem in the Church today is that people aren’t well catechized. If you just give them better religious instruction, everything will be better. But most people I knew were stubborn, and they’re like a horse. So you just have to break the horse. Right?

But what I encountered in Sidney was people have faith. They have large families. They have their devotional lifestyle. They come for Mass, come for confession, and they’re not horses to be broken. There are people with real faith, and so that was one thing.

So I learned how to treat the people with greater respect and have an appreciation for the faith of the people. And I was called to nurture and to help them to grow in their faith. And they helped me to grow in the priesthood. And I had a good pastor up there who taught me about the need for discipline and have a good work ethic and the need for prayer. And so that really helped me.

It also helped me to teach high school because to teach high school is a lot of work, to prepare your lesson plans, to get up there for 45 minutes to deal with high school kids and questions and all this sort of thing. But I also learned to take them and their questions seriously. Their zest for life, their enthusiasm, their inquisitive minds really helped keep me young.

But you have to be a priest to the young and old alike. And to give them the attention they need and to not just tell them, you’re the future of the Church, you are the Church now. And so I really learned to love my people. I’ve loved rural life. I never lived in the country. I was always worried about that. And I think it’s given me an appreciation for the needs of country people but also parishes and the distances they drive and what they’re willing to commit to. And in the archdiocese, that is vocation-rich territory.

Then I was sent to Rome to study. I was just going to school my whole life, and I was enjoying life in the parish, and I’m like, really? You learn other languages. You have to write the dissertation, all this sort of thing, but you miss parish life, you miss being in the regular kind of sacramental flow, and at the same time it was a grace-filled time because we’re there for the agony and death of John Paul II. So a very powerful and moving spiritual experience.

And then to be in St. Peter’s Square when Benedict XVI came out on the balcony, it was a grace-filled time.

Then I came back to teach in the seminary. Several things became clear. One, I had a weekend assignment, and for 6 1/2 years I said Mass at Guardian Angels Church and then for the last couple of years at Sacred Heart Italian church, and to have that gave me some pastoral experience.

But seminary work is hard work, because you’re thinking about all the other guys who get to be in a parish and things. But it’s some of the most important work in the Church, forming good priests. The whole sexual abuse crisis makes us aware of how important priestly formation is today.

When I got called to the nunciature, I realized I was exhausted because I was doing the work of three men for six to eight years. And I knew I needed to slow down and to rest and to pray and to get my bearings again. And that was good for me. What the nunciature gave me was, first of all, a sense of the Church in the United States, all the dioceses. But being with Archbishop (Christophe) Pierre and the other Vatican diplomats, you learn about the Church in the United States and in the world.
Welcome to our Diocese from Fr. Jeff Coning and the Parish of Immaculate Conception Dennison Ohio.

The Most Reverend Earl Fernandes on the occasion of his Installation as Bishop of Columbus

Bishop Fernandes

May God bless you with peace of heart and mind as you embark on this exciting new journey, leading the faithful of the Diocese of Columbus.

St. Francis DeSales High School

To live according to the spirit is to love according to the spirit.

-St. Francis de Sales
It was much to my surprise when Archbishop Schnurr asked me to come to St. Ignatius, and he had to fight with the papal nuncio to send me back to get me back to the Archdiocese of Cincinnati because this parish itself had experienced, unfortunately, a scandal, and it has the largest Catholic elementary school (in Ohio), and so how do you bring healing to a parish? How do you listen to people, talk to people? How can you be transparent?

Sometimes you can help, bring people to peace and lead them forward. And sometimes people are just going to be mad at you, and you can’t do anything right and some people are going to be angry, and what you’ve done is actually harm to them. You ask for forgiveness for that, and you do penance when you can and you pray and you fast and you say your prayers.

Here in a big parish like this, you learn, I’ve got administrative work to do. How do you cut costs? How do you increase your stewardship and levels of financial giving? You can only do that if you have a degree of credibility. And if you’re transparent with people about what you need, people are generous.

Then the pandemic happened, but you see people are hungering for faith and the sacraments. And yeah, you’ve got to go to the COVID wards, but you go, because I didn’t sign up to stay in an office. I wanted to lay down my life, and Jesus did the same.

And then I learned here also, everything’s under lockout. Well, I’ve got a phone, I’ve got a Facebook account, let’s start doing videos. Let’s start using Flocknotes, and so I did for more than a year every single day. It was Scriptural reflections, reflections on the saint of the day, messages to people, and because I didn’t yet know them but through the social media platform, they began to get to know me.

Little by little, we worked through the pandemic, all the masking and social distancing. And we’re trying to keep the kids in school every day. You’re never going to be able to make everybody happy. And that’s something I learned. But if you persevere, you can begin to see some of the fruits of your work. But you can’t always be in damage control. You also have to cast a vision. So part of what I understood a pastor to do is to enable the lay faithful to be able to identify what their gifts are and not be threatened by those gifts but to utilize them because we’re on the same mission of evangelization.

And people are generous not only with their financial resources, but if you ask them and if you personally invite them, they will respond. And so little by little then here at the parish, I’ve seen things come back to life.

Q: Do you have great devotion to the Mother of God?
A: So my parents thought I was going to be a girl, and so they were going to name me Maria. I’m Earl Kenneth Maria, and so I have this devotion to the Blessed Virgin. We grew up praying the rosary. My parents took us regularly to the Shrine of Our Lady of Consolation in Carey, Ohio in the Diocese of Toledo, about 15 miles east of Findlay. I’m sure a lot of people from Columbus have gone, and it fostered our devotion to the Virgin.

When I was a child, I remember on the playground this girl came up to me and said, you know what, “Earl, you’re a gorilla. Your hair is black like a gorilla. Your skin is dark like a gorilla. Your nose is smashed in like a gorilla. You must be a gorilla,” as only a 6- or 7-year-old girl could say. But I took it as a kind of a racial thing, and I just wanted her to know I felt humiliation and rage.

So what did I do? I began chasing her. I chased her all over the playground. And just when I was about to catch her, I ran past her up the handicap ramp into church. And I came into the church, and there was a statue of the Virgin on the wall, and I knelt down and I said one Hail Mary. And I felt her closeness to me and her comfort. And I’ve never forgotten that experience. So she has sort of been with me my whole life. My mother always tells me carry a rosary in your pocket. I grew up knowing that I always felt her maternal presence.

I have a very close connection with the Mother Teresa sisters, the Missionaries of Charity. For all those years I was in Washington, every Sunday morning I went to the house that Mother Teresa had originally opened for HIV positive men, and I said Mass for the sisters, and they are very devoted to Mary, Cause of Our Joy.

So Mary brings us joy, the Holy Spirit brings us joy, Mary brings us Jesus, John the Baptist leaps for joy. And so I’m a joyful priest, and part of that is the Marian presence. She was overshadowed by the Holy Spirit at the conception of the Savior, was at prayer with the Apostles and the whole Church when the Holy Spirit descended like tongues of fire upon them at Pentecost.

And what the Church needs today is a new Pentecost, and what I hope to bring to the Diocese of Columbus is the fire of the Holy Spirit and joy of the Blessed Virgin Mary and the Gospel of her son, Jesus Christ.

“For those who are called, something happens that is analogous to what the miracle was for the first disciples. Always, the experience of a liberation of the human accompanies the encounter with the redemptive event of Christ: ‘Those who follow Him will have eternal life, and the hundredfold here below,’ (cf. Mt. 19:28-29; Mk. 10:28-30; Lk. 18:28-30).”

Bishop was active in parish restructuring in Archdiocese of Cincinnati

By Tim Puet
For The Catholic Times

Bishop Earl Fernandes has arrived in the Diocese of Columbus in the middle of the Real Presence Real Future initiative, which could result in significant changes in diocesan structure and parish groupings.

But being involved in such a program isn’t new to him because the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, where he has been a priest for 20 years until now, is undergoing a similar transformation.

In Cincinnati, what’s known as the Beacons of Light program will group the archdiocese’s current 208 parishes into 57 families of parishes, with each parish family having one pastor, effective July 1.

Father Jan Schmidt, director of pastoral vitality for the 19-county archdiocese, oversees the program and said Bishop Fernandes played a significant role in it as pastor of St. Ignatius of Loyola Church in Cincinnati for the past three years.

“Father Fernandes was part of one of the groups with which I’d consult and bounce off ideas as the archdiocese got ready to put in the changes resulting from Beacons of Light,” he said. “He’s a real Energizer Bunny. He gets things done and is not afraid to put his two cents in on any topic he’s interested in. He’s very visible and would never miss a meeting.

“He also was very active in archdiocesan committees on priestly life and on personnel and had all the responsibilities of the pastor of a large parish. I don’t know how he did it, but he handled them all well. He’s a very supportive, smart man,” said Father Schmidt, who also is rector of Cincinnati Cathedral Basilica of St. Peter in Chains.

He said Beacons of Light was the result of planning that started in 1985 as pastors and parishioners began to realize the number of priests being ordained would not be sufficient to fill the archdiocese’s future needs. Planning for change intensified during the past seven years, with five possible configurations of parishes being considered before the final grouping was announced.

Executives from Cincinnati-based Procter & Gamble, Fifth Third Bank and other companies that have undergone their own restructuring volunteered to help the archdiocese with its plan.

Father Schmidt said the current configuration of 57 parish families will last for five years and then will be reviewed.

The new bishop began writing in 2011 for The Catholic Telegraph, the archdiocese’s monthly magazine, which started as a weekly newspaper in 1831 and switched to monthly publication 11 years ago. While he was teaching at Mount St. Mary’s Seminary of the West in Cincinnati, he wrote a column titled “Question of Faith,” in which he answered readers’ questions. He continued to write it until he was transferred to the Washington, D.C., office of the apostolic nuncio to the United States in 2016.

“My enduring image of Bishop Earl Fernandes is of someone who has inordinately high energy and intelligence, but is at the same time a common man who is always happy and willing to help,” said Archbishop Dennis Schnurr, who came to the Archdiocese of Cincinnati in 2008 as coadjutor archbishop and then became its archbishop in 2009.

“I recall the first time I met then-Father Earl Fernandes 14 years ago. It was the day of my Welcome Mass in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati and there was a breakfast to be held at the seminary. My out-of-town family had no idea how to get there, and I was not yet familiar with Cincinnati, so I flagged down the first person I saw, a priest whom I did not know, and asked for help. Father Fernandes immediately assumed the role of ‘traffic director’ for my family, with great kindness offering them directions and any other help they needed.

“This is the man I came to know and admire—a joyful witness to the Gospel with the heart of a servant, a priest who makes the Catholic faith attractive for all those he encounters.”

Father Fernandes returned to Cincinnati three years later, at the same time Jessica Rinaudo became editor of The Telegraph, moving to Cincinnati after holding a similar position in the Diocese of Shreveport, Louisiana.

“Father Earl was one of the first Cincinnati priests to greet me, and he spoke highly of our publication,” she said. “At the time we were in the process of converting The Catholic Telegraph from a newspaper to a magazine format, and he was taking the reins at St. Ignatius Church. Once we both settled into our new roles, I approached Father Earl about writing for The Telegraph again.

“He readily agreed, and together, we worked on ideas for his new column titled ‘A Priest’s Perspective.’ Within the context of his column, he addressed everything from devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus to bioethics and synodality. He even wrote about a story that overlaps both our lives: five priests who died in the yellow fever epidemic of 1873 in Shreveport, my hometown.

“And when it came time for the archdiocese to roll out Beacons of Light, Father Earl volunteered to write an article series for us on Beacons of Light, his response was, ‘I can come by tomorrow morning. Will that work?’

“Bishop-elect Fernandes has been a friend not only to The Catholic Telegraph and our readers, but to the team of people who produce the magazine, digital content and videos each month. He has a gift for writing and speaking, and we are truly grateful that he shared those gifts with us and the Catholic faithful of western and southwestern Ohio,” Rinaudo said.

“I remember how relatable Father Earl and his students felt with each other when I was a junior and senior at Lehman Catholic High School in Sidney in 2002 and 2003,” said Father Ethan Moore, pastor of four Cincinnati churches and chaplain of the University of Cincinnati’s Bearcat Catholic program.

“He went with us to see Lord of the Rings, and I remember thinking, ‘Whoa! Priests watch movies?’” he said. “A friend of mine had a band, and he would come to his concerts, and eventually he was the celebrant and I was the deacon at our friend’s wedding. “At the time, I thought he was a real cool priest,” said Father Moore, who was ordained in 2015. “Now I realize he had a real gift in his way of conveying the truths of the Church in a fresh, attractive way. He has an incredible intellect, but he’s able to personalize things in a way that makes you remember them more than as just being facts or dogma you had to learn to pass a class.”

Then-Father Fernandes also served as the confessor to the Children of Mary religious sisters at the Our Lady of Holy Spirit Center in Norwood, a Cincinnati suburb.

“He’d come visit us about every month to hear our confessions and asked us in turn if we would come to St. Ignatius School and help with Eucharistic Adoration there, which we were happy to do,” said Sister Faustina Maria, who will be the superior of a new house the Children of Mary will open in August at Holy Angels Catholic Church in Sidney. “Sometimes that’s where he would hear our confessions. “He was always very devoted to the sisters and I know he’d come out of his way to fit us into a crowded schedule. He had a real concern for souls, and he’d often ask his congregation for prayers and sacrifices for us and our work.”

The Children of Mary are an order of 19 sisters established as a lay association in 2002. Mother Margaret Mary, the foundress, is retired and Mother Philomena Maria is the mother superior.

The sisters are residing at their house in Licking County for the summer but in August four will go Sidney, eight will stay in Licking County and seven will return to their motherhouse in Norwood, where they’ve been since 2017. They remain semi-contemplative, working in women’s prisons and schools and helping with retreats and Holy Hours.

Welcome to our new Shepherd, The Most Reverend Earl K. Fernandes! Through the intercession of Mary, Mother of God and Our Lady of Victory, May God grant you many healthy, happy years of ministry as the Thirteenth Bishop of Columbus!
Columbus bishops shepherded growth of diocese

By Tim Puet
For The Catholic Times

Bishop Earl Fernandes became the 13th bishop of the Diocese of Columbus when he was ordained to the office of bishop on Tuesday, May 31 at Westerville St. Paul Church. He succeeds Bishop Robert Brennan, whose term of two years and eight months in that position equals the shortest term of any other Columbus bishop.

During those 32 months, Bishop Brennan visited every parish in the 23-county diocese, many of them more than once, putting thousands of miles on his Ford Fusion.

That period was a memorable one for the bishop and the diocese because of the COVID-19 pandemic and the start of the diocese’s Real Presence Real Future initiative.

Effects of the pandemic began to be felt in mid-March 2020, almost exactly one year from the time Bishop Brennan was installed as bishop of Columbus after coming to central Ohio from the Diocese of Rockville Centre, New York, where he was auxiliary bishop. COVID’s impact was just starting to subside when he returned to New York to become bishop of the Diocese of Brooklyn, where he was installed on Nov. 30, 2021.

Bishop Brennan joined the rest of Ohio’s bishops on March 16, 2020 in announcing that all Catholic churches and schools would be closed and parish activities would be suspended until Easter Sunday, April 12. Public celebration of Masses ultimately did not resume until Sunday, May 30, with restrictions on distancing and crowd size in place, then slowly being eased. Schools resumed on time, also with restrictions at first, for the 2020-21 academic year.

The obligation for Ohio Catholics to attend Mass on Sundays and holy days of obligation was suspended from March 2020 to June 2021, with Mass attendance increasing gradually in the 11 months since then.

Bishop Brennan in February 2021 announced the beginning of the Real Presence Real Future initiative, which is aimed at increasing the presence of Christ throughout the diocese and strengthening the faith of future generations.

Consultation sessions in every parish and among regional groups of parishes were a significant part of the initiative. The sessions helped in forming draft models, which, if adopted, will group some churches together into larger parishes to foster collaboration. The models still are being studied, and it will be up to Bishop Fernandes, in cooperation with pastors, to make any final decisions on parish restructuring.

The Diocese of Columbus currently has more than 278,000 Catholics in 105 parishes, served by 53 diocesan elementary and secondary schools in 23 counties. When it was formed by the Vatican in 1868 from part of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, it included 27 counties and parts of four others in central, south central and southeast Ohio, roughly...

The Most Reverend Earl K. Fernandes
Bishop of Columbus
Vice-Chancellor of the Pontifical College Josephinum running from the Scioto River on the west to the Ohio River on the east. At the time of its formation, the diocese had 32 parishes and 40 missions and a Catholic population of about 41,000.

The first bishop of Columbus was Cincinnati Auxiliary Bishop Sylvester Rosecrans, a native of Homer in Licking County, who had been living in Columbus and serving as pastor of St. Patrick Church when formation of the new diocese was announced.

He established many of the institutions required in the new diocese, including parishes, schools and St. Vincent’s Orphanage in Columbus (now the St. Vincent Family Center).

He also approved construction of the cathedral. Plans to build it began in 1866, work got underway in 1868, the first Masses there were celebrated on Christmas Day 1872, and its consecration was on Oct. 20, 1878. Getting the cathedral built took a great toll on Bishop Rosecrans, who frequently suffered hemorrhages. On the evening of the cathedral’s dedication, he had seven hemorrhages, and he died the next day at age 51. He is buried in the cathedral basement.

His successor, Father John Watterson, president of Mount St. Mary’s Seminary in Emmitsburg, Maryland, was consecrated as bishop on Aug. 8, 1880 at St. Joseph Cathedral. Until Bishop Fernandes’ consecration, this was the only time a bishop of the Diocese of Columbus had been consecrated in Franklin County. Columbus’ other 11 bishops were consecrated either in another diocese or, in the case of Bishop James Hartley, in another part of the Columbus diocese.

Bishop Watterson’s 19 years as its spiritual leader were the greatest period of expansion in the diocese’s history. Almost 60 churches were built, including 25 in places where no Catholic church had existed. In addition, construction projects, a great many of which were schools, were begun at nearly 50 other parishes and institutions.

During this time, St. Anthony and Mount Carmel hospitals were established, as were the college and seminary at the Pontifical College Josephinum. Bishop Watterson also was a strong believer in temperance. No saloon owner was allowed to be an officer in any Catholic organization, and all the young people Bishop Watterson confirmed were required to abstain from liquor until they turned 21.

He died on April 17, 1899, at age 54 and is buried at Mount Calvary Cemetery in Columbus. Father Henry Moeller, chancellor of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, was consecrated as the third bishop of Columbus on Aug. 25, 1900 in Cincinnati and was installed in Columbus two days later. His 32-month tenure matched that of Bishop Brennan as the shortest of any Columbus bishop, but it was said that he saved the diocese by eliminating most of the $200,000 debt that resulted from building the cathedral.

Bishop Moeller was appointed coadjutor archbishop of Cincinnati on April 27, 1903. He became archbishop the following year and remained in that position until his death in early 1925 at age 75.

His successor, Bishop Hartley, spent the longest time of anyone as bishop of Columbus – nearly 40 years – until his death at age 85. That longevity record is unlikely to be broken because bishops now are required to submit their resignations to the pope when they reach age 75.

Bishop Hartley had been a priest in Steubenville, which then was part of the Diocese of Columbus, for 22 years and had been pastor of that city’s Holy Name Church when he was consecrated as a bishop in that church on Feb. 25, 1904.

He then moved to Columbus, where his four decades as bishop ended with his death in early 1925 at age 75.

His proudest work was establishment of a dioecesan seminary known as St. Charles Borromeo College in Columbus. It existed until 1969. It added a high school in 1923, and that institution continues today as St. Charles Preparatory School. Other institutions he established included St. Joseph Cemetery, St. Ann’s Hospital and St. Therese’s Retreat Center, all in Columbus. (The hospital later was relocated to Westerville and is part of the Mount Carmel Health System.) He also had the cathedral remodeled, giving it its medieval appearance.

After Bishop Hartley died, the diocese was directed for most of 1944 by Auxiliary Bishop Edward Hettinger, one of two priests who have served as auxiliary bishop of Columbus. He was an auxiliary even longer than Bishop Hartley was a bishop – more than 54 years, from Feb. 24, 1942 to his death on Dec. 28, 1996 at age 94. He retired from active ministry on Oct. 14, 1977, his 75th birthday, and spent most of the rest of his life living quietly in a cottage in Vinton County. He is buried in St.
Mary Cemetery, Lancaster.

He was pastor of Columbus Sacred Heart Church from 1945-78 and served as vicar general of the diocese and a diocesan consultor from the mid-1940s until retiring as auxiliary bishop. He was an auxiliary under six bishops and served diocesan administrator when the bish-op’s position became vacant because of the death or transfer of five of them. At the time of his death, he had been a priest for more than 68 years and was the senior priest in the diocese and the senior priest in the America hierarchy.

Msgr. Michael Ready came to Columbus to succeed Bishop Hartley af-after eight years in Washington as general secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, the predecessor to today’s U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. In that position, he was the unofficial spokesman for the bishops of the United States and frequently was called on by congressional committees and President Franklin D. Roosevelt to present the Catholic viewpoint on various legislative proposals.

The Diocese of Steubenville was formed in 1944 from 13 eastern Ohio counties that had been part of the Diocese of Columbus for its first 76 years.
At the same time the new diocese was established, the current boundaries of the Columbus diocese were created through the addition of five counties and parts of four others that had been part of the Archdiocese of Cincinnati.

Bishop Ready was consecrated in Washington in late 1944 and was installed as bishop of Columbus on Jan. 4, 1945. Until Bishop Fernandes was consecrated, he was the last bishop of Columbus who had not already been serving as an auxiliary or a bishop elsewhere.

In his 12 years in Columbus, he created 18 parishes, oversaw construction of nine elementary and five high schools and founded two homes for the aged, the Catholic Welfare Bureau (now Catholic Social Services), the Diocesan Council of Catholic Women, what is now the Columbus St. Thomas More Newman Center near Ohio State University, and the diocesan St. Vincent de Paul Society. He worked with his fellow Ohio bishops to start the Ohio Catholic Welfare Conference (now the Catholic Conference of Ohio). He also had the current diocesan Chancery built next to the cathedral in 1949.

Catholic education began undergoing a significant change during Bishop Ready’s tenure and continued for several years thereafter. Parishes retained their elementary schools, but Bishop Ready, presented in 1950 with several options for the future of Catholic elementary education, decided to form a system of consolidated high schools for the diocese.

Bishop Ready died in May 1957 at age 64 and is buried in St. Joseph Cemetary. He was succeeded early the following year by Auxiliary Bishop Clarence Issenmann of Cincinnati.

Bishop Issenmann established the Diocesan Development Fund (now known as the Bishop’s Annual Appeal) to provide funds for the growth of the dioce. He established eight parishes and six consolidated high schools.

His period as bishop not only was a time of continued growth within the dice, but also saw the greatest change in centuries within the Catholic Church, coinciding with most of the period from 1962-65 when the Second Vatican Council was in session. Bishop Is-senmann attended every session of the council. He also was assistant episcopal chairman of lay organizations for the National Catholic Welfare Conference.

Bishop Issenmann became bishop of Cleveland in 1966, retiring in 1974. He died in 1982 at age 75. He was a cardinal back in 1966 when Auxiliary Bishop R. John carthy had been bishop of the Diocese of Lafayette, Indiana for eight years when he was appointed to the same position in Columbus in 1965. He also attended all four sessions of Vatican II.

As chairman of the U.S. bishops’ committee on education, he was at the forefront of efforts to form closer ties between the Catholic Church and other Christian denominations. He also was a founder of the Columbus Metropolitan Area Church Board, one of the nation’s first organizations uniting Protestants and Catholics for ecumensism and social action.

Much of his time in Columbus was devoted to putting the liturgical changes approved by the council in effect in the diocese. In addition, he and the pastors of 10 Columbus parishes formed the Joint Organization for Inner-City Needs (JOIN) to help Franklin County residents struggling to obtain the basic necessities of life. Today, JOIN aids about 25,000 people a year.

Bishop Carberry became archbishop of St. Louis in early 1968 and was appointed a cardinal a year later. He is the only Columbus bishop to achieve that distinction. He retired in 1979 and died in 1998 at age 93.

Succeeding him in 1968 was Auxilary Bishop Clarence Elwell of Cleveland, who as a boy in Cleveland was an altar server for his assistant pastor, Father (later Bishop) Ready. He continued the work of instituting the reforms of Vatican II that Bishop Carberry started.

Bishop Elwell took a strong interest in Catholic education and worked with his fellow Ohio bishops to foster opportunities to send their children to Catholic schools. He founded Resurrection Cemetery in Lewis Center, established the Diocesan Sisters’ Council and the Diocesan Pastoral Council, and moved laypersons into positions of trust. Additionally, he firmed up diocesan finances by expanding the Diocesan Development Office, the Parish Aid Fund and the diocesan self-insurance program.

He died unexpectedly on Feb. 16, 1973, at age 69, in his apartment at the Chancery. He is buried in St. Joseph Cemetery.

ninth bishop in 1973. His service in Columbus was highlighted by support for community housing and food programs and by the reorganization of the diocese into 15 geographical parishes known as vicariates. The original 15 vicariates now number 12 and are known as deaneries.

In 1977, the first Seton Square housing complex for low-income senior citizens and people with mobility impairment opened in Columbus. There are 14 Seton Squares throughout the diocese, with four in Franklin County and the others in Dover (which has two), London, Kenton, Marion, Washington Court House, Wellston, Zanesville, Lancaster and Coshocton.

Both Bishop Herrmann and Auxiliary Bishop George Fulcher, who served in Columbus from 1976-83, were known for their social activism. In 1981, as the nation’s economy faltered, Bishop Herrmann noticed that food pantries and social service agencies could not meet people’s needs and that more people were lining up every day, as they still do, at the cathedral’s back door to receive food.

This resulted in a meeting of community leaders that ultimately led to creation of the Operation Feed campaign, which now is sponsored by the Mid-Ohio Food Collective and provided millions of meals each year to the hungry of Franklin County.

Bishop Herrmann retired in 1982 and moved back to the Washington area for nine years but returned to Columbus in 1991 to continue his ministry as a priest and bishop emeritus. He had a stroke in 1995 and moved to the former St. Raphael’s Home for the Aged, where he died in late 1999. He is buried in the cathedral undercroft.

Bishop Fulcher was pastor of the cathedral when he was appointed as auxiliary bishop in 1976. He was founding pastor of Columbus St. Anthony Church, where he was stationed from 1963-75, and had served at several parishes in the previous 15 years. He was editor of The Catholic Times from 1958-67, taught theology at the Josephinum for 27 years and, like Bishop Herrmann, attended many ecumenical gatherings.

He was on the committee that wrote the U.S. bishops’ 1983 pastoral letter on The Challenges of Peace: God’s Promise and Our Response, which called for nuclear disarmament. In that same year, he was appointed bishop of Lafayette, Indiana. He held the position for less than a year before his death in an auto accident on Jan. 25, 1984.

Bishop Herrmann’s successor, Auxiliary Bishop James Griffin of Cleveland, was installed on April 25, 1983 and served as bishop of Columbus for 21 years, longer than anyone except Bishop Hartley. He reorganized diocesan departments in 1984 into a structure that put more responsibility into their directors’ hands and allowed the bishop to focus more on his role as shepherd and pastor of the diocese. In that year, he also established The Catholic Foundation to provide for the long-term needs of the diocese and individual parishes through management of funds set up for that purpose.

He also initiated the Legacy of Catholic Learning campaign in 1989 and the Poverty is complicated and requires holistic individualized services.

Through the church and aligned with Catholic Social Teaching, our accredited Catholic service organization serves 13,000 people each year at over 13 locations in 23 counties.

We meet people where they are and provide individualized, holistic care which respects their dignity.

We focus our resources on working poor families and vulnerable Seniors. Including the Appalachian community, refugees and immigrants, the homeless and food insecure population, the Latino community, people with disabilities, and veterans.

Many social factors contribute to people living in poverty. These same social factors can likewise have an adverse effect on an individual's health. By linking our programs with the social determinants of health, we see the successes of lifting people out of poverty while also addressing their health and well-being.

Challenge of Changing Times campaign in 2000 to help meet the educational and structural needs of the diocese and its schools and helped initiate a communitywide, faith-based task force that worked to reduce domestic violence.

The former St. Raphael’s and St. Michael’s homes for the aged were closed during his time as bishop and were replaced by the Villas of St. Therese on Columbus’ far east side. The villas include areas for assisted living, opened in 1999, and for independent living, opened in 2001. Mother Angeline McCrory Manor, a skilled nursing care, rehabilitation and memory care facility, was opened adjacent to the villas in 2004.

Bishop Griffin was president of Catholic Relief Services from 1991-95 and served on a number of committees of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. He announced his retirement on Oct. 14, 2004, saying limitations caused by age and arthritis detracted from the energy he needed to serve as bishop. Now 87 years old, he has lived in Powell for the past 16 years. As bishop emeritus, he and his successor, Bishop Emeritus Frederick Campbell, are concelebrants at Masses, such as ordinations and funerals of priests, which bring people and clergy together from throughout the diocese.

At his retirement announcement on Oct. 14, 2004, Bishop Griffin said Bishop Campbell, who was auxiliary bishop of St. Paul/Minneapolis, had been appointed as his successor. Bishop Campbell was installed in Columbus on Jan. 13, 2005.

In that year, the area’s first Catholic radio station, St. Gabriel Catholic Radio, went on the air. Two years later, the National Catholic Youth Conference filled Nationwide Arena with 20,000 young people.

In 2008, parishes throughout the diocese conducted self-studies to examine their needs, leading in the next decade to creation of several groups of two to five parishes each with one pastor, allowing for better use of parish and diocesan resources. The Real Presence Real Future initiative is a continuation of that effort.

In 2009, the Columbus-based Dominican Sisters of St. Mary of the Springs united with several other congregations to form the Dominican Sisters of Peace. The Mexican-based Missionary Sisters, Servants of the Word came to Columbus St. Stephen the Martyr Church in that year to help serve the needs of that parish’s large Latino population.

They have been joined since then by their priestly counterpart, the Missionary Servants of the Word, and by many other orders of sisters and priests who have helped the diocese respond to both a growth in its immigrant population and a decline in the number of diocesan priests, many of whom are past or close to retirement age.

Many weigh in on selection of new bishop

By Tim Puet
For The Catholic Times

The process of selecting a new bishop or auxiliary bishop for a diocese ultimately rests in the hands of the pope, but it’s the result of a collaborative process that goes through many stages. It begins at the local level and ends with a phone call to the bishop-elect from the papal nuncio, the pope’s representative to that country.

Bishop Earl Fernandes and his two predecessors as bishops of Columbus all say they had no idea the call was coming.

Bishop Fernandes at first wasn’t surprised to receive a call on March 21 from the nuncio to the United States, Archbishop Christophe Pierre, for the two had worked together in the nuncio’s office in Washington, D.C., for 3 ½ years.

Then-Father Fernandes was in a hallway just outside his office at Cincinnati St. Ignatius of Loyola Church at the time. “He (the nuncio) asked how I was doing, then followed with questions: ‘Where are you? Are you alone? Are you sitting down?’” Bishop Fernandes said. “I knew from working with him what those questions meant, and the message that would follow – that Pope Francis had appointed me to be a bishop.

“The nuncio then announced that the pope had chosen me to be bishop of the Diocese of Columbus. I was silent for a moment, then accepted the appointment. We talked about many things, and afterwards I began thinking about how my life was going to change.”

Bishop Fernandes was preceded by Bishop Robert Brennan. He was driving on the Long Island Expressway in January 2019 when the nuncio called to announce that he was being appointed bishop of Columbus. At the time, he was auxiliary bishop of the Diocese of Rockville Centre, New York.

“The nuncio asked me, ‘Are you alone?’ and then he asked, ‘Do you think you need to pull over?’” said Bishop Brennan, who has returned to New York as bishop of Brooklyn. “All I could think of was, ‘That happened a minute ago when you first called.’”

Bishop Brennan’s predecessor in Columbus, Bishop Emeritus Frederick Campbell, said the life-changing call came to him “out of the blue” in mid-October 2004 from Archbishop Gabriel Montalvo, who was serving as nuncio then. Bishop Campbell, who at the time was auxiliary bishop of St. Paul-Minneapolis, said he asked for a few minutes to think about what his new appointment would mean, then gave an affirmative response when the nuncio called back to ask whether he would accept the position.

Despite a bishop’s prominence in the church and the community, the appointment process is bound by strict confidentiality. There’s no public speculation as to possible candidates and their merits for the position. Few if any people know with certainty who other than Bishop Fernandes might have been considered as Bishop Brennan’s possible successor, and those people aren’t telling.

The process for selecting a bishop for a diocese begins when a vacancy is created in that office through either the bishop’s death; his appointment to another position by the pope; his retirement at age 75, as was Bishop Campbell’s case; or his decision to retire for other reasons. Bishop Emeritus James Griffin, Bishop Campbell’s predecessor, retired because of health issues in October 2004 after 21 years as bishop of Columbus.

There is no set time frame concerning selection of a bishop. In the interim between the departure or death of one bishop and the consecration of his successor, an apostolic administrator is appointed to be in charge of a diocese.

Msgr. Stephan Moloney held that position in the Columbus diocese for the six-month period between Bishop Brennan’s departure and Bishop Fernandes’ installation. Bishop Campbell was administrator from the time his resignation was accepted in January 2019 until Bishop Brennan’s installation two months later.

Each diocese throughout the world is part of a larger group of dioceses known as a metropolitan province, which has an archbishop – a title that is symbolic and does not convey authority over other bishops. The six dioceses of Ohio all are part of the Cincinnati metropolitan province.

The selection of candidates for consideration to become bishop begins at the provincial level. Any bishop in a province is invited to submit names of priests he thinks possess the maturity, pastoral and spiritual qualities and other characteristics needed for a bishop.

The bishops of a province usually meet at least once a year, and the provincial archbishop at that time circulates the names submitted, along with a resume of each priest named. The bishops then discuss the merits of those priests and vote to decide who among them should be recommended to the nuncio to add to his list of potential bishops for dioceses anywhere in the United States. There is no lower or upper limit to the number of priests who may be recommended.

The nuncio is the pope’s personal representative to the nation – the church’s equivalent of an ambassador. Archbishop Pierre, a native of France who previously was nuncio of Mexico, Haiti and Uganda at various times, has some familiarity with Columbus because whoever serves as nuncio to the United States automatically is chancellor of the Pontifical College Josephinum, the only papal seminary outside of Italy. The bishop of Columbus is vice chancellor.

Bishop Fernandes also is familiar with the Josephinum because he has been one of its trustees since shortly after returning to Cincinnati in 2019 after working in the nuncio’s office.

Once the nuncio receives a list of candidates from a province, he conducts his own investigation to determine their suitability to be a bishop.

When a vacancy is created in the office of bishop for a diocese, the outgoing bishop or the administrator is asked to report to the nuncio on the condition of the diocese, in consultation with other diocesan officials.

During this period, the nuncio can consult with priests, previous bishops and laypersons of the diocese, as well as other bishops in the province and the president and vice president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops. Broad consultation is encouraged with regard to the needs of the diocese and the names of specific candidates.

From these recommendations and the candidates’ list from the neighboring provinces, the nuncio creates a “short list” of potential bishops for a specific diocese. He then sends a questionnaire, to be completed in strictest confidence, to 20 or 30 people who know each of the priests and bishops being considered for the position.

This material is collected and reviewed by the nuncio, who prepares a report of approximately 20 pages, concluding with his selection of five potential candidates – called a terna – in which the candidates are listed alphabetically with the nuncio’s presence noted.

That report is sent to the prefect of the Vatican’s Congregation for Bishops, who for the past 12 years has been Canadian-born Cardinal Marc Ouellet. If the appointment involves a bishop who is being promoted from auxiliary bishop or transferred from another diocese, the matter may be handled by the prefect and the staff. If the appointment is of a priest to become a bishop, as with Bishop Fernandes, the full congregation, which has about 15 members, usually is involved.

One of the congregation’s members is chosen to summarize the documentation and make a report to the full congregation, which generally meets twice a month on Thursdays and usually considers bishop candidates from four dioceses per session. After hearing the summary, the congregation discusses the appointment and usually votes either to follow the nuncio’s recommendation or to choose another of the candidates on the terna. It also has the option of asking that another terna be prepared.

At a private audience with the pope, usually on a Saturday, the prefect presents the congregation’s recommendations to the pope, given in a particular order with the congregation’s choice at the top. The pope then affirms the congregation’s recommendation, chooses another candidate on the terna, asks for a new terna to be submitted or, in the rarest of cases, chooses his own candidate.

The pope’s decision is then given to the congregation, the nuncio is informed and he makes the phone call. Once the pope’s appointment is accepted – it can be refused, but this is rare and must be for good reason – the nuncio arranges with the Vatican to make a public announcement of the appointment, usually within two to four weeks. During this period, the bishop-elect cannot tell anyone of his appointment.

After the appointment of a new bishop is announced, plans begin for his installation, which usually takes place at the diocese’s cathedral but can be at a larger venue so more people can attend. Bishop Fernandes was installed at Westerville St. Paul Church because its seating capacity of 1,500 is the largest of any church in the Diocese of Columbus.

Catholic Social Services opened the St. Francis Center in Portsmouth in a former convent in 2014 to provide improved outreach to residence of the diocese’s southern counties. The same agency in 2017 expanded its Our Lady of Guadalupe Center on Columbus’ west side. The center serves as a food pantry and offers English as a Second Language classes, nutrition classes, health screenings, legal and immigration consultations and other services to the area’s Latino community.

In 2015, Bishop Campbell re-consecrated the diocese to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, 142 years after Bishop Rosencrans originally did so.

No new parishes were formed during Bishop Campbell’s tenure, but new church buildings were dedicated at West Jefferson Sts. Simon & Jude, Johnstown Church of the Ascension, Cardington Sacred Hearts and Westerville St. Paul churches. The latter, the diocese’s largest church building, seating about 1,500 people, has been cited by national publications as an outstanding example of church architecture and was the site of Bishop Fernandes’ ordination.

Bishop Campbell turned 75 years old, the mandatory retirement age for bishops, on Aug. 5, 2018. He announced on Jan. 31 of the following year that Pope Francis had accepted his letter of resignation and that Bishop Brennan would succeed him. Bishop Brennan was installed as bishop of Columbus in St. Joseph Cathedral on March 29, 2019.

St. Catherine of Siena, Chapter #603
Columbus, Ohio

WELCOMES
Earl Fernandes as the 13th bishop of the Diocese of Columbus

It brings the Lay Dominicans honor to support your episcopate and we are grateful you have been chosen to be our humble shepherd. We share in common your devotion to Blessed Virgin Mary, most holy Mother of God, whom you have chosen as your episcopal motto –

“Come Holy Spirit, come through Mary”
“Veni Sancte Spiritus, veni per Mariam”

The Columbus chapter meets monthly at St. Patrick Church. The Lay Fraternities share their gifts while striving to faithfully live out in the secular world the building up of the church and for the glory and honor of God. Lay Dominicans make a life long promise while embodied by partaking in the four Pillars of the Dominican Order: prayer, study, community and apostolate. Fraternity members are blessed to share in the prayers, merits and graces of the whole order.

May the Holy Spirit lead and guide your new endeavor. We are here to serve you Bishop Fernandes and we will keep you in our prayers. Thank you for your ‘yes’!

The Diocese of Columbus’ annual seminarians bike tour ventured outside the outer belt of the city and into Lancaster and Newark on May 24-25 before returning to the suburbs.

The seminarians made stops in Lancaster at St. Bernadette and St. Mary of the Assumption to speak with elementary school students and Fisher Catholic High School to talk with ninth through 11th graders on May 24 before heading to Newark for an overnight stay at St. Francis de Sales Church.

After meeting with St. Francis de Sales students on the morning of May 25, the seminarians headed to Westerville St. Paul for a May 26 visit with students and then biked to Worthington St. Michael School to conclude the three-day tour before returning to the Pontifical College Josephinum.

The seminarians who make the trek offered their thoughts on the experience.

Seminarian Joey Rolwing said, “The bike tour serves a couple of purposes. First, it’s a great experience of fraternity amongst the seminarians when we can spend time together, do something active, and explore the diocese a little bit. But it’s also primarily about getting out and spreading the message of vocations by talking to students in their schools and encouraging them to be open to God’s calling in their lives, teaching them about the different vocations, and inspiring them to strive for holiness.”

Seminarian Shane Gerrity observed, “I’m just excited to get to meet all the kids and see all the different churches and schools. It lets you become familiar with the diocese and it’s a great way to let young people get to know some of the men who are actually in formation for the priesthood.”

Seminarian John-Paul Haemmerle shared, “It’s all about getting out, seeing the diocese, having fraternity amongst the seminarians and promoting vocations. It helps the students we talk to see that seminarians and priests are just regular guys who like to go on bike rides, hang out and have a good time.”

Sam Severance offered, “The bike tour helps these young kids put a name to a face that they otherwise might only see on a poster in their school or church. They have encounters with us, we talk to them during lunch, and they’ll remember that.”

Right to worship in peace deserves protection

It’s time for a history quiz. Do you remember Jan. 22, 2021? The diocese was celebrating its annual Respect Life Mass at St. Gabriel Catholic Radio. Those assembled included clergy, families with small children, students and the elderly. The Mass was live-streamed to Catholic schools across the diocese and on St. Gabriel Catholic Radio.

Then-Bishop Robert Brennan’s homily on this anniversary date of the U.S. Supreme Court’s Roe v. Wade decision stressed the importance of respect for one another, especially unborn children, their mothers and the most vulnerable. He talked about prayer, peace and nonviolence.

During his homily, protesters entered the cathedral carrying signs and shouting. “Two, four, six, eight. This church teaches hate.” They marched down the main and side aisles. They knocked over and broke a table.

Jerry Freewalt, previous director of my office and current executive director of the Catholic Conference of Ohio, provided firsthand testimony about the protest during a hearing on March 3, 2022, on Ohio House Bill 504, the Sacred Spaces Act.

“I could see members of the congregation shocked, frightened and disturbed,” he said. “It was a jolting protest during a hearing on March 3, 2022, on Ohio House Bill 504, the Sacred Spaces Act.

“I immediately turned around to shut the cathedral doors. ... As I stood on the cathedral steps, I took a deep breath and calmly prayed to God with my hands folded as the protesters repeatedly shouted at me. After several chants, they stopped.

“I then calmly said, ‘We are here in peace. We are here out of respect. We love you. I love you.’ One protester said to me, ‘We hate you.’ I was glad that at least the remarks were directed at me and not the congregation at that point.

“I wanted to stabilize the situation in a nonviolent way and return their words with a message of Christian love and respect, which in fact was the central message of the Mass. Soon after, several police officers arrived at the cathedral.

“The Ohio House passed the Sacred Spaces Act on April 6 (95-1). The Senate version was introduced on April 12 but not assigned to a committee until May 18. We now need to contact our state senators to have them move the bill forward quickly.

Certainly, the new threats of violence on social media focused on the U.S. Supreme Court’s leaked draft majority opinion on Roe v. Wade/Dobbs v. Jackson Women’s Health Organization should be enough to push our state senators forward. Yet, we know politicians need to hear from their constituents.

All our brothers and sisters in the faith community understand the importance of gathering together to worship. For Catholics, the Mass is the pinnacle of communal worship. It is our encounter of the real presence of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist.

For all people of faith, our houses of worship should be sacred, safe places. All are welcome to worship — friends, family and strangers.

The Sacred Spaces Act would make it clear that intentional disruption of a Catholic Mass or any religious service bears consequences. Free speech is alive and well; however, religious expression, civility and respect also are alive and well and need to be protected.

Freewalt reminds us that “the Catholic Conference of Ohio is in support of HB 504 not only because these events happened to us, but also because these events should not happen to anyone who attends a religious service. People should be able to worship in peace.” It is our hope this bill will send a message to Ohioans that our state will not tolerate the disruption of sacred spaces.”

For more information and Freewalt’s full testimony, go to Religious Liberty - Catholic Conference of Ohio (ohiocathconf.org).

Please contact your state senators and ask them to support the Sacred Spaces Act.

And, please pray for all people of faith who fight to preserve religious liberty. May the Lord strengthen their resolve to hold firm in their witness.

The cardinal and Jimmy

Tertullian, the first major Christian theologian to write in Latin, is thought to have coined the maxim Semen est sanguis Christianorum, typically (and rather freely) translated as “the blood of martyrs is the seed of the Church.” Martyrs, we usually think, are those who shed their blood “in hatred of the faith”; the definitive work on martyrdom used by the Vatican’s Congregation for the Causes of Saints. But an ancient Christian tradition, likely as old as Tertullian, considers those who suffer severe persecution for Christ as martyrs or, more precisely, “martyr-confessors.”

By that standard, the Church’s two most prominent martyr-confessors in May 2022 are the emeritus bishop of Hong Kong, Cardinal Joseph Zen, SDB, and the Hong Kong journalist, entrepreneur and freedom-fighter, Jimmy Lai.

Jimmy has been in jail for months; Cardinal Zen may be heading there, although the 90-year old churchman was released on bail after being arrested May 11 under Hong Kong’s draconian national security law. It speaks volumes about the wicked men in Beijing who have made China the ugly face of contemporary totalitarianism that they are so frightened by the cardinal and Jimmy. And why are China’s seemingly omnipotent leaders scared? Because Joseph Zen and Jimmy Lai believe that we are made for freedom, and especially the freedom to know, love and worship God. Having staked their lives on that conviction, Cardinal Zen and Jimmy Lai have refused to kowtow to communist threats — and both have suffered persecution, harassment and arrest as Hong Kong has been stilled by leaders like Carrie Lam and John Lee, who have the affrontery to call themselves “Catholics.”
Mays joins diocese as director of communications

Jason Mays began his new duties as the director of communications for the Diocese of Columbus on May 24.

Previously, Mays was a staff member at WCMH NBC4 TV for 21 years, most recently as the station’s managing editor.

In his new role, Mays will oversee diocesan communications efforts, including serving as press secretary for the Bishop of Columbus, overseeing media relations for other diocesan offices, publication of The Catholic Times newspaper, coordination and planning of other diocesan media tools, and marketing and public relations advice and guidance to diocesan offices.

“We are very pleased to welcome Jason to the Diocese of Columbus team,” said Matthew Schluter, diocesan Chief Operating Officer. “His considerable experience coordinating the fast-moving projects of TV news coverage and his dedication to his Catholic faith and the Church’s mission make Jason the perfect candidate for this vital role in the Diocese of Columbus.”

Mays succeeds Deacon Thomas Berg Jr., diocesan Chancellor, who has served as interim Director of Communications since July 2021. Deacon Berg will continue as Chancellor.

“I have had the opportunity to work with Jason a number of times on coverage of various aspects of the Diocese of Columbus,” Deacon Berg said. “He is a true professional who cares about and assures the quality of the work for which he is responsible. He will be an outstanding member of our diocesan team, and, like everyone else here, I look forward to working with him.”

At NBC 4, Mays’ experience included vetting and approving newsroom story pitches for on-air broadcast and digital platforms, assisting reporters in story crafting, fostering station relationships with news sources, the design and implementation of breaking news response protocols as well as protocols for tracking personnel, equipment, and other resources, keeping staff informed on assignments, and daily newsroom editorial meetings.

Mays also worked for NBC 4 as an assignment editor and photojournalist. In addition, his personal experience includes being a bicycle mechanic and builder.

Mays and his family are members of St. Timothy Church in Columbus.

Review board finds allegation of abuse of minor by priest credible

As part of the Diocese of Columbus’ continued investigation of an allegation of sexual abuse of a minor brought against diocesan priest Father Dean A. Mathewson in January, the Reverend Monsignor Stephan J. Moloney, Diocesan Administrator, has accepted a May 16 recommendation by the Diocesan Board of Review for the Protection of Children that the allegation is credible and that his name be added to the published diocesan list of clergy who have been credibly accused of sexual abuse of a minor, which has been done.

Father Mathewson, 77, remains on administrative leave during further canonical and administrative processes. Priests on administrative leave are prohibited from the public exercise of their priestly ministry. They cannot publicly celebrate sacraments, wear clerical attire, be housed at any parish or on diocesan property, or identify themselves as a member of the clergy.

A determination of credibility is never to be considered proof of guilt. This action and announcement are made in accordance with the Catholic Church’s Charter and Norms for the Protection of Children and Young People and the Diocese’s published Policies for Prevention of Sexual Abuse of Minors and Response to Allegations Thereof. The meeting of the Review Board was convened to assess the results of an investigation and make a recommendation as to whether the allegations against Father Mathewson appeared to be credible.

An accusation of sexual abuse of a minor, allegedly occurring during Father Mathewson’s tenure at St. Francis de Sales Parish, Newark, Ohio, in the early 1990s was reported to the Diocese on January 19, 2022. This allegation had already been received by criminal authorities in Newark. On January 24, 2022, Diocesan officials notified Father Mathewson of the allegation and informed him of the details of the allegation. He was formally placed on leave, and he was advised about the steps the Church would follow as a result of the allegation.

Plans for outreach in the Diocese continue, and once that effort is finalized, more information will be provided to parishioners in the Diocese.

Fr. Mathewson served as the Diocesan Coordinator for Priest Hospital Chaplains from 2006 until January 2022, with part-time duties as Catholic Chaplain at Riverside Methodist Hospital, Columbus, and residence and part-time sacramental duties at St. Thomas the Apostle Parish, Columbus, during that same time period. He also has served as Associate Pastor, St. Brendan, Hilliard (2003-2006); Pastor, St. Francis de Sales, Newark (1995-2003); Administrator, St. Francis de Sales, Newark, (1994-1995); Associate Pastor, St. Francis de Sales, Newark (1991-1994); Pastor, St. Joseph, LaRue, with part-time teaching duties at Marion Catholic High School (1981-1991); Associate Pastor, St. Mary, Chillicothe, with part-time teaching duties at Bishop Flaget High School (1977-1981); and Assistant Parish Priest, St. Matthias, Columbus, with part-time teaching duties at St. Francis de Sales High School (1973-1977).

The Diocese of Columbus encourages anyone who may have claims of abuse by clergy or others associated with the Church to notify law enforcement immediately as well as the Diocesan Victim’s Assistance Coordinator (614-448-0217 or helpisavailable@columbuscatholic.org); and, in this case, Detective Steven Vanoy, Newark Police Department (740-670-7928).

The feast of Pentecost is one that moves us strongly in our hearts. It is one of the most important feasts of the Christian calendar. On Pentecost, the Holy Spirit comes upon the apostles and transforms their lives. The Spirit is given to us to empower us to share the gospel with others.

All salvation history is gathered into the experience of Pentecost. The feast of Pentecost is a time when we remember the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on the apostles. This outpouring of the Holy Spirit is a sign of the mystery of the life of God.

Father, Son and Spirit.

In addition to the riches of the Scripture that are associated with the celebration of Pentecost, a special prayer, called the Sequence, is part of the Liturgy of Pentecost. The images captured in this poetic cry of the heart invite us to call the Spirit into the crevices of our lives that need divine consolation and healing.

Looking into the life of God as Three Divine Persons

Proverbs 8:22-31
- Psalm 8:4-5, 6-7, 8-9
- Romans 5:1-5
- John 16:12-15

Ordinary Time resumes immediately after the Feast of Pentecost. However, the Sundays after Pentecost offer a marvelous “overflow” of the Paschal Season with specific celebrations of aspects of our faith in God and the sacramental life of the Church.

The Feast of the Most Holy Trinity follows upon the Solemnity of the Spiri, reminding us that what we are invited to share is the very mystery of the life of God.

The Holy Trinity is the One God Who has been active through creation and salvation history. Through the Spirit, we are invited to experience a “glimpse” of the inner life of the Godhead.

Although our minds will never fully comprehend the mystery, we are taken into the divine perspective as we hear the song of wisdom at the moment of creation: “then was I beside him as his craftsman, and I was his delight day by day, playing before him all the while, playing on the surface of his earth; and I found delight in the human race.”

We are taken up in wonder at the reality of our own being in the world and in relationship with God. “When I beheld your heavens, the work of your fingers, the moon and the stars which you set in place—What is man that you should be mindful of him, or the son of man that you should care for him?”

The celebration of Easter and the Paschal Mystery, with the outpouring of the Spirit, now draws us into the mystery of God’s own life: the One God is revealed as Three Divine Persons: Father, Son and Holy Spirit. The revelation of the mystery of the Holy Trinity comes to us not as something for us merely to know about, but rather as something to experience. We are called to relationship with the One God, Who is Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

In the Spirit, we address the One Who is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ as “My God, My God” and as...

“Abba!” Our human nature has been made radically capable of such a cry through the Passion, Death, Resurrection and Ascension of Jesus.

Transformed by the Spirit, we know Jesus as our Brother, Savior, Lord and Friend, as the Eternal Son of the Father Who also entered into time as the Son of Man, one of us, truly human and divine. Jesus Christ is God, and He shares with us His own intimate knowledge of and relationship with the Father, Who sent Him among us to bring salvation.

The Holy Spirit, the Spirit of the Father and the Son, is sent to us to remind us of all that Jesus taught and to share with us the very life of God. We are caught up by the Spirit into the flow of the life of Father, Son and Spirit, and through that life we have power to change the world and to direct it to eternity.

We do not have the capacity to grasp the full meaning of the mystery, but by the power of the Spirit, we do begin to enjoy the depth of relationship that is offered. Time and eternity are woven into one flow of life, the life of God, made known to us in creation and in our relationships with one another. We are caught up in this life, and so we hope for an increase of God’s Presence among us. This hope is our salvation in these times of trouble.

May God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, free us to see the world as God sees it. May wisdom open our eyes to the mystery, and may we share the wonder of the psalmist “O Lord, our God, how wonderful your name in all the earth!”

Mary Ann Carle

A funeral Mass for Mary Ann Carle, 95, who died Saturday, May 14, was celebrated Friday, May 22 at Circleville St. Joseph Church. Burial was at St. Joseph Cemetery, Circleville.

She was born on March 21, 1927 in Jackson to Edward and Della (Spohn) Ward.

For nearly 30 years, she assisted her husband, Joseph, in operating the NFO livestock collection point in Williamsport. Their marriage was the subject of a Catholic Times feature story in October 2020. She also worked as a cashier at the Kroger store in Jackson for 11 years.

At St. Joseph Church, she was a choir member, cantor and organist and belonged to the Altar-Rosary Guild, serving as chairwoman of the guild’s twice-a-year rummage sale for more than 20 years. She also enjoyed playing the piano at the Pickaway County Senior Center and at local nursing homes.

Before moving to her husband’s family farm outside Circleville after their marriage, she was a choir member and organist at Jackson Holy Trinity Church and sang in the community women’s choir.

She was preceded in death by her parents and a son, William. Survivors include her husband; sons, Robert (Liz), maintenance supervisor in the Diocese of Columbus’ downtown office building; Jacob (Leann) and Edward (Joni); daughters, Mary Jo (Nathan) Thompson, Patricia (David) Case and Teresa (Phil) Downey of Hilliard; 12 grandchildren and six great-grandchildren.

Margaret J. Selegue

Funeral Mass for Margaret J. Selegue, 94, who died Monday, May 9, was celebrated at Columbus Christ the King Church. Burial was at St. Joseph Cemetery, Columbus.

She was born on Feb. 27, 1928 to Richard and Cecilia Callahan and lived in Boonville, Indiana, before her family moved to Columbus.

She graduated from Columbus St. Leo High School, Columbus St. Joseph Academy and Franklin University.

She was employed by the development office of the Diocese of Columbus from 1973 to 1994 and worked earlier for the Big Bear Stores Co. and was an active volunteer for Columbus Christ the King School and Columbus Bishop Hartley High School, serving on the Hartley advisory board for 10 years.

She was preceded in death by her parents; husband, Lawrence; daughter, Kate Delker; and two infant daughters. Survivors include sons, Michael (Kelley), Brian (Barb), Stephen (Kimberly) and Paul (Deanna); daughters, Rebecca and Amy (Phil); brother, Richard (Sarah); sister, Patricia Briggs; 16 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

CATHOLIC CROSSWORD SOLUTIONS

Mary J. Leonhardt

Funeral Mass for Mary J. Leonhardt, 87, who died Monday, May 23, was celebrated Saturday, May 28 at Resurrection Cemetery Chapel, Lewis Center.

She was a graduate of Columbus St. Mary High School, a former librarian at Columbus Corpus Christi School, a long-time member and extraordinary minister of the Eucharist at Columbus St. Peter Church, and the retired president of Capital Awards Inc., where she worked until she was age 82.

She was preceded in death by her husband, Donald; son, Thomas; and brother, Al Speth. Survivors include sons, Dan (Janice) and Dave (Clare); daughters, Kathy Wotruba and Karen (Mike) Berman; brother, Bill (Sharon); 15 grandchildren and 18 great-grandchildren.

William B. Sparks Jr.

Funeral Mass for William B. Sparks Jr., 80, president of the diocesan St. Vincent de Paul Society from 2008 to 2014, who died Sunday, May 22, was celebrated Thursday, May 26 at Columbus St. Thomas More Newman Center.

He was born on June 27, 1941 to William and Margaret Sparks. He grew up in Park Ridge, Illinois; graduated from the University of Notre Dame and received a Master’s degree in business administration from Cornell University.

He had lived in Powell since 1995, when he became president and chief operating officer of Greif Inc. He retired in 2006. He and his family also lived in Elizabeth, New Jersey; Dayton; Richmond, Indiana; and Sacramento, California.

He was preceded in death by his parents; son, Thomas; and brother, Robert. Survivors include his wife, Marlene (Lyons); sons, William (Sukanya), Steven (Jennifer) and David (Jessica); daughter, Suzanne (Richard); brother, Father Richard Sparks, CSP; sister, Kathleen (John) Capper; and seven grandchildren.
Home Missions appeal keeps struggling dioceses afloat

By Sister Zephrina Mary, FHI
Director, Diocesan Missions Office

In the Diocese of Columbus, the collection for the Home Missions will be taken on the weekend of June 4-5.

In 2021, the faithful in the diocese contributed $47,110 to this special collection. I thank you for your generosity on behalf of Bishop Earl Fernandes and the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) committee in charge of the collection.

Home Missions in the United States and its territories cannot exist on their own. Approximately 40% of U.S. dioceses are designated as “missions” by the USCCB.

Mission dioceses lack the resources to provide basic pastoral services. These dioceses struggle with severe shortages of priests, poverty among parishioners, difficult or isolated terrain, religious hostility and other circumstances that hinder efforts to spread the faith.

The Second Vatican Council is particularly eloquent on this point relative to the role of the laity – they are to “make Christ visible for others.” (Lumen Gentium, n.31) The smallest Catholic populations tend to exist in rural areas of the South, such as in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas; in Appalachia; and in the Caribbean.

The COVID-19 pandemic had a catastrophic impact on our lives. Jobs have been lost, travel restricted, even access to churches has been limited.

The Diocese of St. Thomas in the Virgin Islands is a diocese of the Latin Rite of the Church in the Caribbean. Former Bishop Herbert A. Bevard says that without Catholic Home Missions funds, the diocese wouldn’t exist.

“In spite of the challenges here and with help of Catholic Home Missions many people who love and support us, we are able to do a good job as missionaries for Jesus Christ and His Church. It would be a terrible thing if we didn’t have Catholic Home Missions at our back and our side as we strive to be a good, vibrant, life-giving church.

“In the Virgin Islands, you have evangelization on its feet. It is not just talking or wishing or hoping or planning, but bringing many people to know Christ and His Church much better.” (Catholic Home Missions, Newsletter, Issue 1 2021)

Mission dioceses do marvelous work among non-Christians, the urban poor and minorities. They also promote mission awareness and vocations and train seminarians for missionary work. Their service eases the suffering of the poor.

For example, Glenmary missionaries exclusively serve the poor in rural U.S. missions. Their ministries include building Catholic communities, evangelizing the unchurched and conducting social outreach throughout Appalachia and the South.

Home missionaries are supported by free-will offerings and they support poor families with food drives, coat drives, etc. Let us remember the message of Pope Francis to the Pontifical Mission Societaries: “A special care for the little ones and the poor. Any missionary impulse, if derived from the Holy Spirit, manifests predilection for the poor and vulnerable as a sign and reflection of the Lord’s own preference for them.

“These directly involved with the Church’s missionary initiatives and structures should never justify their lack of concern for the poor with the excuse, widely used in particular ecclesiastical circles, of having to concentrate their energies on certain priorities for the mission. For the Church, a preference for the poor is not optional.” (Vatican news, May 21, 2020)

Our help for the poor is a priority because God wants us to be sharers of our resources with minorities and the vulnerable.

The USCCB’s Catholic Home Missions collection helps to fund 84 dioceses and eparchies in the United States and its territories.

Thank you for your sacrificial response and for all you do for the mission work of the Church. May our prayers, sacrifices and financial support for the missions bring the expansion of the reign of Christ who shed His blood for all mankind.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Earl Fernandes
Bishop of Columbus

Our Lady of Peace hosts GrandPal-A-Thon

More than 450 people, including students, teachers, parents, grandparents, great-grandparents, aunts, uncles, neighbors and friends, took part in Columbus Our Lady of Peace School’s GrandPal-A-Thon last month. School principal Jim Silcott said it was by far the school’s biggest event since the COVID-19 pandemic.

The day began with Mass, followed by entertainment from kindergarten students and second- and third-graders, and two songs from the seventh- and eighth-grade musical.

The school building was open to guests afterwards, and at 10 a.m., there was a parade through the neighborhood, escorted by Columbus police. Following the parade, students and their guests got to eat, talk, play and enjoy each other’s company.

During the day, money was raised for the school’s gymnasium ramp project. About $8,000 of the project’s approximately $65,000 goal remains to be raised. It is hoped the project will be completed at the same time as the renovation of the Msgr. Kenneth Grimes Gymnasium is completed for the return of students in August.

Serra Club honors altar servers

The 59th Annual Serra Club of Columbus Altar Server Award Ceremony was held May 1 at Columbus St. Joseph’s Cathedral.

Msgr. Stephen Moloney, diocesan administrator, presided over the ceremony and in his talk to the award winners and their families shared with them that he won the same award 52 years ago.

There were 62 altar servers in attendance representing 31 parishes in the diocese who were presented a medal and certificate to thank them for their dedication to Our Lord, the Mass, their parishes and the diocese.

Each year, the Serra Club of Columbus holds the ceremony, sponsored by the Catholic Foundation, to identify and encourage vocations to the priesthood, the deaconate and religious life.

New bishop seeks aid for U.S. missions

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ,

The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops has designated one weekend every year for the Catholic Home Missions collection. This year in our diocese, the collection will take place on the weekend of June 4 and 5. The program was established to guarantee continued funding for the mission dioceses in the United States, which cannot exist without the financial help from Catholics elsewhere.

Contrary to what many people think, the missions are not only in Africa, Asia, India and Latin America. The missions are also in the vast wilderness of Alaska, in the Deep South, in the Rocky Mountain states, in the Appalachian regions, in the Southwest, in Puerto Rico, in the Virgin Islands, and in American Samoa and the Marshalls.

The Catholic Home Missions collection helps fund evangelization efforts, religious education programs, education and training of seminarians and the training of pastoral caregivers in the areas of the United States where Catholics are few and the Church is fragile.

I invite you to respond generously to the Catholic Home Missions Appeal. May the Lord bless us in our efforts to help expand and strengthen the presence of the Church at home.

Sincerely yours in Christ,

Most Reverend Earl Fernandes
