2015 LENTEN FISH FRY GUIDE
Oh yeah, it’s winter

I’m feeling grumpy. It’s cold and damp and gray outside. Seems like it has been that way for ever. My usual tonic to get through the brutal winter months is major league hockey. I love the game. But my通过 the brutal winter months is major month, as well as all winter long, is a time when many people feel down. The days are shorter, the weather is colder, and the landscape is often bare and bleak.

One way to combat this malaise is to stay active and involved in your community. There are many opportunities to volunteer and make a difference, no matter how small. Whether it’s helping out at a local charity event, participating in a community clean-up, or simply checking in on a neighbor who might need some extra support, there are endless ways to stay connected and make a positive impact.

Another way to combat winter blues is to focus on the positive. We can choose to look for the good in each day and find things to be grateful for. Whether it’s the warmth of a cup of tea, the beauty of a snow-covered landscape, or the shared experience of a winter tradition with loved ones, there are things to appreciate even when it’s cold and dark outside.

Finally, it’s important to take care of ourselves. This means getting enough sleep, eating a healthy diet, and engaging in regular physical activity. Even small steps like taking a daily walk or practicing mindfulness can make a big difference in our overall well-being.

Remember, you’re not alone. Many others are feeling down too. It’s important to reach out to friends and family members who might be struggling as well. Talking about our feelings can be a powerful way to start healing and finding hope.

As the days grow longer and the weather starts to warm up, we can look forward to a time of renewal and rebirth. Winter may be a difficult season, but it’s also a time of beauty and hope. With a little effort, we can choose to find joy and meaning even in the coldest of months.

Catholic Man of the Year

Bill Hinger, recipient of the 2015 Catholic Man of the Year award, says that although it’s an individual honor, it should be shared among all those who have helped him serve church and community.

“Any accomplishment which may have been associated with it was done by the working of the Holy Spirit through the Body of Christ,” Hinger said.

Hinger’s 30-year connection with Catholic University of America is a testament to his commitment to education. He was named as an associate professor in 1986 and received a tenured appointment in 2002.

But Hinger’s impact goes beyond the classroom. He’s also been a vocal advocate for the rights of the disabled and has been a mentor to many young men.

Hinger was honored by the Knights of Columbus at the Catholic University of America on February 4.

Focolare founder’s cause opened

Chiara Lubich, founder of the Focolare movement, “At a new light in the church’s journey toward unity,” Pope Francis told hundreds of people gathered in the cathedral of Frascati, Italy, on Jan. 27 for the formal opening of Lubich’s cause.

The pope expressed his hope that the “shining example” of her life and activity would strengthen Focolare members’ faith and commitment to building up the unity of the church in family relations and with members of other religions.

Lubich, who died at age 88, founded the Focolare movement with a few friends during the Second World War, inspired by Jesus’ words “that they all would be one.” Gradually, the women decide to do a community and share everything they had with each other, with the idea that they might have a sense of family gathered around a hearth -- in Italian, “focolare”.

The movement now has more than 600,000 members and 300 affiliated associations and a strong focus on building positive relations with people of other faiths.

Focolare has been approved in the Diocese of Columbus for more than 20 years and has frequent gatherings of various kinds, independent parties and associations.

“Members of the Columbus Focolare community resisted with the wide and multi-cultural contacts, and associated associations and a strong focus on building positive relations with people of other faiths,” said the news of Chiara Lubich’s cause for beatification advancing. Some of them have had the gift of vocation in persons during their lifetime,” said Jude Giacone, community outreach representative for Focolare in Columbus.

The formal opening of a saintliness cause, approved by the Vatican Congregation for Saints, is largely a judicial act. It includes the revolution of various official acts, including the promoter and members of a tribunal which will establish and evaluate the evidence testimonies and study the candidates’ writings. The cause of Chiara Lubich will be presented.

Bishop Rafael Martinelli of Frascati, seat of the diocese in which the Focolare movement originated, told the congregation the work the Focolare movement is devoted to is “so simple, that it is a service we want to render to the church in the service of faith, hope, and charity through the work and life of the members of the movement.”

The tribunal was scheduled to have its first formal session on Thursday, Feb. 12, when it was to interview Maria Vincenza Zocca, who is Lubich’s successor as head of the movement. The member of the Focolare movement consists of the first of about 100 people who knew Lubich and experienced with her life and work.

“Chiara’s breadth of knowledge in the areas of accounting, finance, and will management will serve as an example to others in the area,” said the Rev. Mark Strada, O.S.B., director for the Alfe Corporate Services department for the University of Dayton.

Strada has been with the University since January 2009 and has worked closely with the leadership teams at several colleges and universities which had assets ranging from $45 million to $400 million. Previously, Strada served as finance director for the Ally Group in Fort Wayne.

Long has troubled me: Why aren't Catholic institutions, and, in many cases, to select an external expert in financial affairs and civil law, outstanding. These finance councils -- which are established canonically to conduct external audits, but are not required canonically -- have been instrumental in ensuring integrity. “These finance councils -- which are established by the parish finance council. Admittedly to diocesan offices, and further oversight of the United States in 1972, I tried for decades to fight for the traditional Latin Mass noted that there were many more and sometimes rejected the Mass. And I couldn’t hear myself talking to the Lord, nor could I feel his presence. So many new songs were thrust upon us so that we couldn’t learn them. (The hymns at the old Masses meant so much to me.) I was 74 years old. (Virginia Beach, Virginia)

It saddens me that you are depurifying denominational statements on the grace of Christ and publishing them in your denominational newspaper.

What the church’s Code of Canon Law dice re-

In 2007, Pope Benedict XVI, in a document called Dominus Filius, confirmed a new celebration of the traditional Latin Mass. Here is what he said: “In parishes where a group of the faithful, attached to the previous liturgical tradition, has gathered, the parish priest will willingly accord to their requests to celebrate Holy Mass in accordance with the rites of the 1962 Roman Missal.”

A report published in 2014 by a group promoting the traditional Latin Mass noted that there are more than 400 places in the United States where the Eucharist was celebrated in that form. I suggest that you contact your diocesan office to see if there is a Roman Missal Mass in your location.

Sister Marie Louise Pohlman, OSF

Irena Sendler was 29 years old when Nazi tanks rolled into Warsaw, casting a shadow of fear over the town and slicing it apart with a withered photo for the Jewish residents.

There was no way she could sit back and watch. The social worker with the shy eyes and round baby face stood 4-foot-11 and possessed an unshinking courage. She had two pining girls in life: her Catholic faith and her late father, a physician who had died of typhus contracted from low-income patients.

So Irena took action, pretending to be a nurse in order to gain access to the Warsaw ghetto and deliver food and medicine. The garments of the ghetto residents’ fate became clearer with every passing day as clusters were rounded up, marched to the freight yard, and shipped an hour away to the Treblinka death camp. The sight of the youngest among them—toddlers carrying their dolls—haunted Irena.

She enlisted her closest friends and colleagues, mostly young women, to form a secret network for the imprisoned Jews, sneaking in and smuggling children out. Irena bundled babies in garbage wagons and gave them sleeping potions to keep them quiet on the way out. Kids were directed through secret passageways into sewers, following whispers and flashlights.

Parents were forced to make “heart-rending calculations, and Irena could not guarantee that their children would survive if they fled through her network. “I still have nightmares about it,” she said in a 2011 PBS documentary, tapping her left index finger to her temple.

“You’re going on a wonderful adventure,” one Jewish child was told by her caretaker, with whom she was later reunited. “You’re going to be a good boy.”

Irena embraced the wartime orphans as she routed them to safe houses and then permanent homes. “We had to give them a lot of love and attention to help them adapt to their new lives,” she said. Beyond the sheer bravery required of the endeavor—perhaps a byproduct of Irena’s youth—it was an act of organizational might. She coordinated each step with pinpoint precision.

The greatest help came from Irena’s Catholic connections. She called on priests, who created fake baptismal certificates for the Jewish children. They were taught Catholic prayers so they could demonstrate non-Jewish heritage under possible Nazi interrogation.

Despite the grave risk, 200 Polish convents opened their doors to the kids. The sights, sounds, and smells of Mass comforted Peer Zettlinger, who was 4 when he left his parents in the ghetto. “For this hungry, bedraggled boy,” he told PBS, “tucking into those beautiful and splintering ceremonies was quite wonderful.”

The nuns were always on guard for German inspectors. Given one cue, Peer would run to the attic and hide in a cupboard.

Miraculously, the system worked. All the Jewish kids placed in convents through Irena’s network survived the war. Irena saved the lives of about 2,500 children.

“She had to get 90 and never considered herself a hero.”

“It was simple,” she said. “I remember what my father had taught me. When someone is drowning, give him your hand.”

The Holy Father issued the same challenge again and again, beginning with his inaugural homily, when he called us to be “protectors of one another.” We can do so, Pope Francis said, by being “constantly attentive to God.”

This month would mark Irena’s 105th birthday. Our worlds may be vastly different, but we can honor her memory by treating our neighbors with the same compassion.

It is simple.

We have a lot of young families, but only the children will have more room to play. Victorian Village and into the suburbs so older, their parents mostly move out of baptisms here, but when the children get age children. We have an awful lot of do have are mostly those with preschool- son households.

“Sundays are completely different from weekdays. Residents of Victorian Vil- lage come to the 9 and 11 a.m. Masses, and we get a lot of people from the cam- pus as well. We have about 500 families registered, but many of these, perhaps even close to half, are one- or two-perso- n households.

“Because of our location, the families we have are mostly those with preschool- age children. We have an awful lot of baptisms here, but when the children get older, their parents mostly move out of Victorian Village and into the suburbs so the children will have more room to play. We have a lot of young families, but only 14 children in our Catechesis of the Good Shepherd classes,” which serve as the par- ish school of religion for three-year-olds through preparation for First Communion.

“Besides those young families, we also have many people attending from the Westminster-Thurber retirement com- munity,” which has been operated by Ohio Presbyterian Retirement Services in Victorian Village for the past 50 years, Father Valcin said, “so we have people from all ends of the age spectrum.” The parish’s involvement with Westminster- Thurber includes a Mass there at 11 a.m. on the third Tuesday of each month, a com- munual service on Ash Wednesday, and a weekly Bible study that has taken place there for at least the past dozen years.

“The Bible study has developed into a good ecumenical outreach,” said Jay Jackson, who has participated in it since 2003. “We study the readings in the Lectionary for each Sunday. It began as something for Catholics only. Par- ochial had their own Bible study, but their group got smaller, and with many of the Protestant churches having the same Scripture readings as Catholics on most Sundays, we decided on a joint study. This has been very beneficial to everyone involved, whatever their faith tradition.”

The parish’s location means it also has an ethnically diverse congregation. Parts of its Pentecost Mass last year were in five languages — English, Italian, French, German, and Spanish. Frequently featured music from South Africa as part of one week’s Sunday liturgies, and has high- lighted music of other nations in the past. Musicians from the area’s Haitian Cath- olic community, for which Father Valcin is chaplain, pay an occasional visit; and the parish has hosted the Magin Concert, a 20-piece ensemble featuring a variety of music spanning the period from the Re- naissance to the 20th century.

The parish’s stewardship activities are centered on events in October because the Feast of St. Francis of Assisi is Oct. 4. In October 2013, the parish steward- ship council asked parishioners to cre- ate a tapestry as a symbol of the parish. More than 100 responded, contributing items including bamboo, palm branches, and even old neckties, all of which were woven together on a handmade loom that was set up in the church hall and taken to the annual parish picnic. The completed tapestry is displayed in the church, to the right of the sanctuary.
Lent is almost upon us. The final Mardi Gras parties are under way. In a few days, Ash Wednesday will be here, ushering in a season of repentance and sacrifice. But it does not mean we will be totally without good times.

One of the great parts of Lent is the return of that wonderful Catholic institution, the Friday fish fry. Since you are going to give up meat every Friday, this is a great way to get something extra out of that discipline. The fish fry is a chance to not only make a personal sacrifice, but also strengthen your bond with your spiritual community by building the strength of the parish through fellowship. That is really important.

You will get some great food and return of that wonderful Catholic tradition.

The 18th annual Columbus Catholic Men’s Conference, with the theme “Deepen Your Faith. Be a Man of Spirit!” will take place Saturday, Feb. 28 at the Voinovich building on the state fairgrounds.

A dynamic lineup of speakers will feature Father Herbeck, Chris Spielman, Ralph Martin, T.R., and Ralph Martin. Father Herbeck is vice president and director of missions for Renewal Ministries, an organization devoted to Catholic renewal and evangelization. He has been active in evangelization for nearly 30 years. He also recently earned his doctorate in history.

ROSECRANS STUDENT PLANS CITY’S FUTURE

Zanesville Rosecrans High School student Emily Dosch is working on the city’s future for her senior project. It is one of 15 representatives on the city’s comprehensive master plan committee, which meets every Thursday during the school day.

She has taken part in the committee’s deliberations, as well as attending City Council meetings. City Council member Mark Baker said he chose Dosch for the planning panel because of her involvement and maturity. Baker teaches history and literature at Zanesville High School.

“Realize not all high-schoolers are bright, but she is one,” he said. “I think I’m giving them a voice,” she said.

Dosch said she has an interest in biomedical engineering in college. In addition to her work on the planning committee, she has a part-time job, volunteers at

CATHOLIC CEMETERIES

Field workers will be removing winter-time and artificial decorations from graves and mausoleums at all Catholic cemeteries beginning March 2, 2015.

We request that families wishing to retain any personal keepsakes, to please remove them by March 2.

Due to the number of decorations involved, the cemetery staff cannot be responsible for collecting or storing personal items. Thank you for your cooperation.

Catholic Consumerism:
Human Trafficking
By Stephanie Rapp
Catholic Relief Services Fair Trade Ambassador

I first discovered Fair Trade when I worked for The Salvation Army as an anti-human-trafficking specialist. There I learned that our demand for cheap products leads to a demand for cheap labor, and ultimately encourages the exploitation and trafficking of humans. Human trafficking is a horrific crime against the fundamental rights and dignity of the person. It is the buying and selling of persons. The United Nations Protocol on Human Trafficking defines it as “the recruitment, transportation, harboring, or receipt of persons by means of force, fraud, or coercion.” The atrocity that is human trafficking occurs all over the world, including in our own city. It is paramount that we do everything we can to end human trafficking. One easy and effective way to fight human trafficking (which I’ll explain in more detail next week) is to buy Fair Trade products!
